The Meaning of Persons Paul Tournier, 1975 The Meaning of Persons Paul Antoine Tournier, 1970 Means, Ends, and Persons Robert Audi, 2015-10-01

No one wants to be treated merely as a means used in a sense But just what is this repugnant treatment Audi's point of departure is Kant's famous principle that we must treat persons as ends in themselves and never merely as means Treatment of these kinds is conduct a complex three dimensional notion whose central elements are action its motivation and the manner of its performance He shows how the notions of treating persons as ends and by contrast merely as means can be anchored outside Kant and clarified in ways that enhance their usefulness both in ethical theory and in practical ethics where they have much intuitive force Audi constructs an account of treatment of persons of what it is how it differs from mere interpersonal action and what ethical standards govern it In accounting for such treatment the book develops a wider conception of ethics than is commonly implicit in utilitarian deontological or virtue theories These results contribute to ethical theory but in its discussion of diverse narrative examples of moral and immoral conduct the book also contributes to normative ethics Audi's theory of conduct takes account of motivational elements that are not traits of character and of behavioral elements that are not manifestations of virtue or vice Here it goes beyond the leading virtue approaches The theory also advances rule ethics by framing wider conception of moral behavior roughly of acting morally The results advance both normative ethics and ethical theory For moral philosophy the book frames conceptions articulates distinctions and formulates principles and for practical ethics it provides a multitude of cases that illustrate both the scope of moral responsibility and the normative standards for living up to it

Women, Men and Persons Britt-Marie Thurén, 2025-06-06

Urban ethnography about gender change Madrid in the 1990s was a lively place This book presents ethnographic examples and analyses of the way gender meanings were changing The context is middle class comparisons are made with an earlier work in a working class area of Valencia The theoretical focus is on processes of cultural change using mainly speech in natural situations as the empirical base since talking is one form of doing The historical and social background is also described Madrilenian conversations were full of examples from all walks of life and personal situations The historical moment was one of change from an authoritarian society to a more democratic one These larger circumstances were often symbolized in terms of gender issues A common idea in Madrilenian discussions was that women should be or become persons This use of the concept person has little to do with individualism or psychology It was rather an everyday way of expressing opposition to essentialized and hierarchical categorizations The phrase meant that a person is an active human being who refuses to be categorized by others whereas a woman must look and behave so that her gender is clearly contrasted to that of a man And this it was thought places women at a disadvantage But there were also those who thought that a woman can only be a person if she is a woman first

Rethinking Pain in Person-Centred Health Care Stephen Buetow, 2020-12-30 This book explores how person centred health care could be refined to help persons alleviate pain related distress and construct pain as a potentially positive experience Rethinking Pain in Person Centred Health Care is a fascinating contribution to the multidisciplinary literature on person centred health care pain and ethics Traditionally Western intellectual culture has downplayed the intuitive and emotional promoting instead rational natural scientific perspectives Applied to pain an instrumental approach promotes the immediate and effective relief of pain due to the widespread suffering and expense it can cause However different persons experience pain in different ways and Buetow moves beyond a commitment to eliminate pain to exploring how benefits of pain could include creating and managing meaning from pain Rather than always looking to put pain behind them persons may flourish by moving around pain through pain into pain and above pain Buetow argues that this model depends on adopting a person centred approach to health care focusing less on the condition of pain and more on mobilizing the persons who present with and manage pain This book will be of interest to professionals and academics researchers in the fields of psychology and psychiatry who have a special interest in people with persistent pain conditions It will also be an invaluable resource for physiotherapists chronic
