

A multi-criteria analysis method to measure islands' connectivity

Maria B. Lekakou – George D. Remoundos

Abstract

Greek coastal shipping, based on a network of a large number of mainland-to-island, island-to-island and mainland-to-mainland connections, plays a critical role in the country's social cohesion and economy. The appraisal of the Greek islands' connectivity needs and the design of an adequate and efficient transport system compose a very complicated and complex problem. The problem is exacerbated, not only by the current economic crisis in Greece, but also by the lack of a systematic and sufficiently documented decision making procedure based on monitoring, recording and processing of the available relevant data.

In this context, this research aims at evolving a methodology for the assessment of the level of islands' connectivity, in terms of passenger ferry transportation, based on the theory of multi criteria analysis. The calculation of connectivity indices for each island within an island complex, providing a comparative depiction of connectivity, could be a very useful decision making tool for both the regulator and the operator.

Keywords: connectivity, islands, passenger transport, multi criteria analysis.

1. Introduction

1.1. The background

The contribution of coastal transport in national cohesion and economy, particularly in countries with island regions (e.g. Greece, the Philippines, Indonesia etc.), is not only important but also indispensable. From a geographical perspective, coastal transport bridges the mainland with the islands and the islands with each other. From an economic and social point of view, ferry services influence the people of the islands, provide opportunities for economic development and enhance the islanders' quality of life.
