

Measuring Impact

Take these 6 steps in the earliest stages of program planning and design:

Engage Stakeholders

Identify who they are – including participants, delivery team, investors, and more – and their expectations for outcomes.

Connect with the Program Design

Define what knowledge and skills the program is designed to develop and how you'll know learning has occurred.

Focus the Evaluation

Narrow the scope to measure only what's critical, so you don't over-collect data or miss something of great interest to stakeholders.

Confirm Resources & Expectations

Do a reality check: are time, people, and budget resources available to match expectations? Often, they're not aligned.

Determine Data Collection Methods

Surveys, interviews, focus groups, and observation are common and each has advantages and disadvantages.

Plan for Communication of Results

Determine the best way to communicate useful data to stakeholders when they need it and in a way that encourages action.
