

MEDIA, CULTURE, AND SOCIETY

CH. 1 | Media, Culture, and Communication

- The media is one of the most powerful tool in shaping what our culture and democracy is today. Having good critical thinking skills is key to understanding the media and culture.
- Culture involves beliefs (customs/rituals), games, technologies, traditions, and institutions. Without community this culture means nothing.
- The media also controls a lot of political aspects. For example, who control the production of these media representations? Different news sources will have different opinions/bias. Companies like Disney will produce different things than other companies.

CH. 2 | The Internet Today & Mental Health

- FOMA: The Fear of Missing Out (getting anxiety from thinking that something exciting is happening without you).
- The internet today makes FOMA a lot worse (think about Instagram and how people only post about the exciting things).
- Before the 1990s, the Internet was way more confusing to navigate (no organization). The World Wide Web (www.) has changed this.
- The internet is used in many movements (a benefit to unrestricted communication). Examples of this would be the Black Lives Matter movement.

CH. 4 | Sound Recording Today

- Musicians are a lot more independent today than before. Now they sell their music directly to fans (and not some 3rd party).
- The music industry has become more accessible to create because of the streaming industry.
- Music always has a cultural aspect to it. An example of this would be urban Black music using rhythm and blues (R&B).

CH. 6 | Television Today

- In 1948 only 1 percent of America's household had a TV set (now over 90% of households have TV).
- In 1870s inventors started to try and use electrical signals to transmit pictures.
- Creating such a common culture with TV shows has helped with the democratic processes (the presidential debate on TV).

CH. 7 | Movies Today

- For over 100 years, movies had a cultural impact on society (stories that shape ideas to who we are).
- Muybridge and Goodwin made the first projector to project photographic images (first motion picture) in 1880.
- Movies help create a common culture. At a cultural level this is termed consensus narratives (provide shared cultural experiences).

Conclusion

- The media has a huge impact on society and culture, it can also be used as a tool to see what that current society is like. Starting from oral tells to books and now with mass media on technology, it has changed a lot. The impact of the media continues to grow as the technology develops. There is now more research being done to learn more about media and how it relates to culture & society.
