California Health Report Neal Halfon, 2000 Communities throughout the United States are increasingly engaged in the process of measuring health in order to address pressing health care needs develop better programs and policies and to improve the quality of life of their residents These initiatives have resulted in the development of detailed health reports and shorter report cards at state and community levels In many instances state and local communities have used these reports to launch either wide scale and or targeted health improvement initiatives In the spirit of further developing innovative means for measuring the health of communities we created the California Health Report Putting Poor People to Work Kathleen M. Shaw, Sara Goldrick-Rab, Christopher Mazzeo, Jerry A. Jacobs, 2006-08-17 Today a college education is increasingly viewed as the gateway to the American Dream a necessary prerequisite for social mobility Yet recent policy reforms in the United States effectively steer former welfare recipients away from an education that could further their career prospects forcing them directly into the workforce where they often find only low paying jobs with little opportunity for growth In Putting Poor People to Work Kathleen Shaw Sara Goldrick-Rab Christopher Mazzeo and Jerry A Jacobs explore this troubling disconnect between the principles of work first and college for all Using comprehensive interviews with government officials and sophisticated data from six states over a four year period Putting Poor People to Work shows how recent changes in public policy have reduced the quantity and quality of education and training available to adults with low incomes The authors analyze how two policies encouraging work the federal welfare reform law of 1996 and the Workforce Investment Act of 1998 have made moving people off of public assistance as soon as possible with little regard to their long term career prospects a government priority Putting Poor People to Work shows that since the passage of these work first laws not only are fewer low income individuals pursuing postsecondary education but when they do they are increasingly directed towards the most ineffective short term forms of training rather than higher quality college level education Moreover the schools most able and ready to serve poor adults the community colleges are deterred by these policies from doing so Having a competitive agile workforce that can compete with any in the world is a national priority In a global economy where skills are paramount that goal requires broad popular access to education and training Putting Poor People to Work shows how current U S policy discourages poor Americans from seeking out a college education stranding them in jobs with little potential for growth This important new book makes a powerful argument for a shift in national priorities that would encourage the poor to embrace both work and education rather than having to choose between the two Institute for Research on Poverty Affiliated Books on Poverty and Public Policy An Institute for Research on Poverty Affiliated Book on Poverty and Public Policy

Championing Child Care Sally Solomon Cohen,2001 Based on more than 100 interviews with government officials and extensive archival research this book looks at the politics behind child care legislation Identifying key times at which major child care bills were introduced Cohen examines the politics surrounding these events and subsequent political negotiations Cohen also looks at the impact President Clinton had on child care policymaking and how child care legislation became part of other issues including welfare reform and tax policy revisions

Racing to the Bottom? Kathryn Harrison,2011-11-01 The spectre of a race to the bottom is increasingly prominent in debates about globalization and also within federal systems where the mobility of both capital and individuals prompts fears of interjurisdictional competition with respect to taxes and environmental and welfare standards While there has been no shortage of either political rhetoric or academic theorizing on this subject empirical studies have been in shorter supply This volume seeks to fill that gap by asking Are Canadian provinces engaged in a race to the bottom and if so what are the consequences The contributors apply insights from economics and political science to several policy fields What emerges is a theoretical and empirical picture of interprovincial competition that shows it to be more complex than the popular image of a race to the bottom and that also contradicts predictions of an inexorable downward spiral This timely practical volume will be of interest to public policy practitioners as well as to students and scholars of economics and political science

McCroskey,Susan D. Einbinder,1998-08-20 Leaders in interprofessional education efforts examine the potential and the challenges of developing effective partnerships between universities and communities focusing on improving the lives of families and children Until recently higher education has had little to do with the multiple service reform efforts underway across the country in response to widely perceived crisis in services for families and children By maintaining professional preparation programs that emphasize separation between disciplines and increasing specialization universities have typically reinforced service fragmentation This book suggests steps that universities can take toward solutions by changing current approaches to professional education in multiple disciplines supplementing professional education with interprofessional training and developing effective partnerships with communities to improve outcomes for families and children Directed toward those academics in professional preparation programs and allied professionals this book describes changes underway in professional practice with families and children including service integration multidisciplinary service provision and other collaborative efforts and suggests steps that universities can take to partner with community members and community based professionals A broad range of disciplines and perspectives are represented including social work education public administration geography urban planning nursing psychology and medicine and other allied fields The chapters are organized in four parts the needs and challenges for interprofessional education changing theories and infrastructures of community practice linking the university to the community and challenges for universities for the next century
