Geoghegan, 2021-10-29 Almost everything you know about airships is wrong Between 1917 and 1935 the US Navy poured tens of millions of dollars into their airship programme building a series of dirigibles each one more enormous than the last These flying behemoths were to be the future of long distance transport competing with trains and ocean liners to carry people post and cargo from country to country and even across the sea But by 1936 all these ambitious plans had been scrapped What happened When Giants Ruled the Sky is the story of how the American rigid airship came within a hair's breadth of dominating long distance transportation It is also the story of four men whose courage and determination kept the programme going despite the obstacles thrown in their way until the Navy deliberately ignored a fatal design flaw bringing the programme crashing back to earth The subsequent cover up prevented the truth from being told for more than eighty years Now for the first time what really happened can be revealed Model Rocket

When only the Sky is the Limit Kerstin Leitner, 2014-02-14 Kerstin Leitner has worked as a staff member of the United Nations for 30 years from 1975-2005 What makes her memoirs interesting to read is the fine combination of practical work and reflections of why the UN is such a unique place to work for She shows that when working in Africa the Arab world China and when introducing modern information and communication technologies globally to the UN things appear very similar to work in other national and socio-economic settings and yet they are distinctively different Ms Leitner's years with the UN span part of the Cold War era and the post 1989 period when only one superpower remained and the market economies of the Western world began to dominate the global economy As a German she was among the first to serve the UN after the two German states joined the world organization in 1973 As a woman she was among the first generation that broke through the glass ceiling for women and rose to the senior management level
