Colonialism and Capitalism: Canada's Origins 1500-1890 BRYAN D. PALMER, 2024-09-17 In the past decade Canadian history has become a hotly contested subject Iconic figures notably Sir John A Macdonald are no longer unquestioned nation builders The narrative of two founding peoples has been set aside in favour of recognition of Indigenous nations whose lands were taken up by the incoming settlers An authoritative and widely respected Truth and Reconciliation Commission together with an honoured Chief Justice of the Supreme Court have both described long standing government policies and practices as cultural genocide Historians have researched and published a wide range of new research documenting the many complex threads comprising the Canadian experience As a leading historian of labour and social movements Bryan Palmer has been a major contributor to this literature In this first volume of a major new survey history of Canada he offers a narrative which is based on the recent and often specialized research and writing of his historian colleagues One major theme in this book is the colonial practices of the authorities as they pushed aside the original peoples of this country While the methods varied the result was opening up Canada's rich resources for exploitation by the incoming European settlers The second major theme is the role of capitalism in determining how those resources were exploited and who would reap the enormous power and wealth that accrued The first volume of this challenging and illuminating new survey history covers the period that concludes in the 1890s after the creation out of Britain's northern colonies of the semi autonomous federal Canadian state Volume II to be published in spring 2025 takes the narrative to the present

Water in North American Environmental History offers 25 case studies that explore the range of uses and perceptions of water throughout Canadian, Mexican, and United States history. Water has served a myriad of purposes historically: as human sustenance, agricultural irrigation, sanitation, fire protection, military defense, power generation, transportation, and much more. Water and its uses provide an excellent entrance into the study of humans and the environment, not only because water is a vital resource for life, but also because water as a medium is so intimately woven into the everyday experiences of humans and into society's economic, political, and social fabric. A North American perspective is not representative of the world's water use, but it is an area with a linked history and many overlapping human and environmental features and concerns. With a continental perspective, the book explores many disparate topics without being confined to the history and experiences of just one country. The chapters are short but descriptive and departure points for what they tell us about the human experience in dealing with water and the environmental implications of water use. The text leads students to consider water in relation to society and to the past. The book will be of interest to students of environmental history, geography, and the environmental sciences.

Making Vancouver Robert A.J. McDonald, 2011-11-01. Making Vancouver explores social relationships in Vancouver from 1863 to 1913. It considers how urbanization structured social boundaries among Burrard Inlet's increasingly large population and is premised on the belief that in studying social boundaries, historians must abandon single category forms of analysis and build into their research strategies the capacity to explore complexity. Robert McDonald thus traces the relationship between the two forms of identifying class and status for the whole of Vancouver society. The book starts with the years when settlement on Burrard Inlet centred around two lumber mills, explores periods of elite dominance of city institutions, and then of growing social and political conflict following the arrival of the railway, examines the heightening of class tensions at the turn of the century, charts economic growth during the boom years before the war, and concludes with three chapters on the tripartite status hierarchy that emerged in concert with that of a class dichotomy. It reveals a western city that was neither egalitarian nor closed to opportunity. Vancouver up to the pre-war crash of 1913 was open and dynamic. The rapidity of growth, easy access to resources, narrow industrial base, and influence of ethnicity and race softened the thrust towards class division inherent in capitalism. Far more powerful in directing social relations was the quest for status, creating a social structure that was no less hierarchical than that predicted by class theory, but much more fluid. The social boundary that separated the working class from others is revealed as a division that for much of the pre-war boom period divided Vancouver society more fundamentally than the boundary separating labour from capital.

Warner, Margaret Sermons Purser, 2017 A 2017 Choice Outstanding Academic Title The mythic American West with its perilous frontiers big skies and vast resources is frequently perceived as unchanging and timeless The work of many western based historical archaeologists over the past decade however has revealed narratives that often sharply challenge that timelessness Historical Archaeology Through a Western Lens reveals an archaeological past that is distinct to the region but not in ways that popular imagination might suggest Instead this volume highlights a western past characterized by rapid and ever changing interactions between diverse groups of people across a wide range of environmental and economic situations The dynamic and unpredictable lives of western communities have prompted a constant challenging and reimagining of both individual identities and collective understandings of their position within a broader national experience Indeed the archaeological West is one clearly characterized by mobility rather than stasis The archaeologies presented in this volume explore the impact of that pervasive human mobility on the West a world of transience impermanence seasonal migration and accelerated trade and technology at scales ranging from the local to the global By documenting the challenges of both local community building and global networking they provide an archaeology of the West that is ultimately from the West
