Summary: This practical will help you design your own experiment and help you test your own hypothesis that you have developed yourselves. You'll also learn about animal contests, and how various traits affect contest outcomes.

The aim of this practical is to give you hands on experience testing a hypothesis so you will have a better idea of what constitutes the Scientific Method. You will learn how to develop a hypothesis and a methodology to test it.

You will be given two scientific papers to read before you start your experiment.

While reading the paper, pay attention to the hypothesis the researchers were testing. See if you can figure out why they were interested in this hypothesis. Take note of the methods they used and try to understand why they chose those methods and whether this allowed them to answer their hypothesis. Then see how they analysed and visualised their data in the results, and what their conclusions were.

Answer the following questions for one of the papers. Still read both papers though for comparison and later discussion.

➤ What is their question?

To examine whether the success of male-male fights is influenced by the UV reflectance of the nuptial throat patch of male European green lizards.

➤ Why did they ask this question/why is this research important?

Animal communication through colour signals is very important in sexual selection.

➤ What methods did they use to answer this question?

Some males nuptial throats were treated with UV-reducing agents. They were then pitted against males without UV-reducing agents to see whether they would be more likely to win or lose a fight (if escape the other lizard = loser, if maintain aggression and other lizard escapes = winner)

The Clinical Research Handbook: A Practical Guide To Designing, Conducting And Publishing Clinical Research Mohammad Faizan Khan, Nolan J Brown, Julian

Gendreau, Ronald Sahyouni, Aaron Cohen-gadol, 2025-07-18. Through clinical research, field-changing ideas are formulated, tested, and ultimately translated into clinical practice with the goal of improving healthcare for generations to come. From a practical perspective, there is a need for medical students both in the United States and internationally to be exposed to clinical research in their medical education. In the United States, many students are encouraged to perform research in medical school for the overall advancement of the field and also to become competitive for the medical residency match process. The latter point has become even more important over the past two years as Step 1 has recently become pass/fail, and thus many students are turning to research to become competitive candidates in their field of interest. However, often in the clinical environment, academic mentors are often busy, and in some medical schools, it is difficult to find. Therefore, students in these situations need a written resource that describes how to perform research for junior medical professionals. Internationally, some medical students may have difficulty finding mentors to guide them in performing effective clinical research. Therefore, in The Clinical Research Handbook, the authors attempt to provide a concise and effective reading that allows individuals to gain introductory knowledge in performing clinical research. We completely describe the process of research by describing how to formulate ideas, test these ideas, and submit these ideas as publishable manuscripts to journals. Specifically, we cover many key concepts such as: Where possible, we take all opportunities to explain these subjects in non-technical and easy-to-understand terms, and each chapter is designed to be read as a unique individual reading in an effort to save time for the reader. Since this is primarily aimed at individuals that are junior in their career, we aim to make this reading as low of a cost as possible. Using our book, medical students will be able to go from formulating ideas to accepted publication by using all of the information provided here.
