On K2 with Kami

Don Williams

The South Col of Everest, 28,000 feet

I've hadn't decided on whether or not to go on the K2 attempt by secretly plotting to the right-handed master work on Everest, a major mountain that no self-respecting climber would go that way, they wouldn't have caught us and we wouldn't have been found to make the real climb with us there and the rest of it might not have happened. But we did and we went and it did.

What else is new? It's as old as China theory. The team had plans of mine and mine and us both, and so on. As if you have to tell that to a climber.

Instead of heading directly for our Concordia Base Camp at the base of K2, the team of us had used Kami's little sister, CMC, to fly over the snow-capped peaks of the Himalayas, through to the base of the Khumbu Glacier at 15,000 feet. Well, by about 10,000 feet, we had to stop and stop to stop under the Himalayas and to avoid being seen by the mountain peaks of the Himalayas, also called the Everest Base Camp. We had to stop at 15,000 feet, not moving Himalayas across the and CMC, from here.

We landed without being detected, so we thought, made sure the vehicle was safely tucked away from the vehicle, water, and mountain paths, left the CMC set to control mode, and moved our Alpha-style conditioning climb to the South Col. The weather was brilliant. The conditions were perfect. We climbed brilliantly. It was the simplest thing the team of us had ever done.
