Reflections on Statistics Learning, Teaching and Assessment in Grades K-12

(The Studies in Mathematical Thinking and Learning Series)

Mahwah, NJ: Lawrence Erlbaum Ass., 1998. – 334 p.
ISBN 0-8058-1972-X

David Green, Loughborough (UK)

1. Introduction

This book is one outcome of an attempt to address issues relating to statistics at the pre-college level through the creation of an interdisciplinary working group consisting of mathematics educators, cognitive scientists, teachers, and statisticians. The brief was to address the challenge in a manner that could help teachers and researchers make informed decisions about how to introduce statistics in grades K-12. A premise shared by the contributors is that by introducing statistics in the K-12 period, students will be better prepared for decision making in the real world. This volume represents an interdisciplinary effort to construct an understanding of how to enhance statistics education and assessment for students in elementary and secondary schools.

2. An overview of the book

2.1 Section 1: “Statistical Content for School Mathematics”

In the first section – on the statistical content of school mathematics – it is rightly pointed out, the issues of statistical content and conceptual understanding need to be investigated concurrently, and there is a dearth of such studies. Nevertheless some progress has been made, and one aim of this book is to encourage further work. At this level in particular the issue of how informal knowledge can be used as a guide to instruction is important. Most work has been in the rather limited field of probability, but work on children’s intuitions about modelling is reported. As the introduction says, “only by documenting cognitive skills and the characteristics that differentiate the skilled from the unskilled learner for each content area ... can we improve the teaching and assessment of such understanding”. The section provides a clear indication of the capabilities of high school students and how progression can be promoted. A significant theme is the need to develop critical skills and attitude to statistical data, rather than simply computational and presentational skills. This is exemplified by the laudable assertion that “every high-school graduate must be educated to be an intelligent consumer of data ... and to judge the value of data produced by others”. The point is well made that statistics is about numbers in context.

2.2 Section 2: “Teaching Statistics”

The second section has chapters on graphical representation and professional development for teachers. The authors address the issue of how to build on students’ prior knowledge in the context of graphical representation and data interpretation, emphasising the construction of relationships and extending understanding through multiple contexts. There is discussion of the problems of teacher education and an innovative professional development programme is described.

2.3 Section 3: “Learning Statistics”

The third section contains three chapters. The first two provide detailed examinations of the development of understanding of chance and uncertainty, demonstrating transitions in mental models of statistical understanding. The third chapter explores simulations as vehicles for statistical understanding.

2.4 Section 4: “Assessing Statistics”

The fourth section is on assessment which has an important role in both shaping the curriculum and informing teacher and student of progress made. The point is made that statistical understanding is difficult to define and assess in general terms and communication is a key concept. Verbal rather than written modes of working (and assessing) may be more appropriate, and multiple methods of assessment need to be encouraged. A theme throughout the book is the need to marry instruction and assessment into a unified whole curriculum.

3. A closer look at chapters of the book

3.1 Chapter 1: “What every high school graduate should know”

This chapter, by the respected authorities Sheaffer, Watkins and Landwehr, is a tour de force of statistics at the school level, with excellent sections on number sense, variables,
