good character Lance and Emery were on friendly terms and Lance who thought he saw good qualities in his companion would gladly have won his confidence but Emery did not like what he called Lance's lectures and there was very little or no interchange of thought between them Without it real friendship can scarcely be said to exist They were however looked upon as school friends and certainly Lance would at all times have been ready to do a friendly act for Emery Emery was somewhat of a fine gentleman in his way His father was a tradesman in the place and wished his son to assist him in his business but Emery often spoke of entering the army or one of the liberal professions He therefore considered himself equal to those whose fathers held a higher social grade than his own His father's style of life encouraged him in this Mr Dulman had a handsome house and gave dinners and parties and at elections took a leading part and entertained the proposed member and his friends and indeed sometimes talked of entering Parliament himself and altogether did a good deal to excite the envy of his less successful fellow townsmen Minutes of Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends, 1888 American college and
