The New York City Public School System

STEVEN J. FREDERICKS
Bank Street College of Education

In many large urban centers, students, parents, communities, teachers, and local school boards have had little to say about the educational policies (both administrative and curricular) that affect them. Because of the culturally, ethnically, and racially diverse make-up of urban populations, various groups have demanded more participatory control of their schools in order to satisfy their distinctive needs; and these same people, questioning their relationship with the educational structure, have found, more often than not, that their impotence to state, direct, and achieve educational objectives is very much related to ongoing intrabureaucratic struggles. In this regard, probably no city can match New York City in size and potential as an illustration of bureaucratic growth. Its mushrooming bureaucracy and concomitant pressures reached such proportions that, in November of 1969, decentralization of the New York City public school system was legislated from Albany.

Decentralization and community control have been historically perceived as two distinct notions, the former involving ways that bring much needed balance to the ongoing debate The authors analyze what parents value in education how much they know about schools how well they can match what they say they want in schools with what their children get how satisfied they are with their children s schools and how their involvement in the schools is affected by the opportunity to choose They discover most notably that low income parents value education as much as if not more than high income parents but do not have access to the same quality of school information This problem comes under sensitive thorough scrutiny as do a host of other important topics from school performance to segregation to children at risk of being left behind New York Court of Appeals. Miller, Plaintiff-Respondent, Against Fred W. Smythe, Defendant-Appellant , School Reform. Corporate Style Dorothy Shipps,2006 Like other big city school systems Chicago s has been repeatedly reformed over the last century Yet its schools have fallen far short of citizens expectations and left a gap between the performances of white and minority students Many blame the educational establishment for resisting change Other critics argue that reform occurs too often still others claim it comes not often enough Dorothy Shipps reappraises the tumultuous history of educational progress in Chicago revealing that the persistent lack of improvement is due not to the extent but rather the type of reform Throughout the twentieth century managerial reorganizations initiated by the business community repeatedly altered the governance structure of schools as well as the relationships of teachers to children and parents but brought little improvement while other more promising reform models were either resisted or crowded out Shipps chronicles how Chicago s corporate actors led abetted or restrained nearly every attempt to transform the city s school system then asks whether schools might be better reformed by others To show why city schools have failed urban children so badly she traces Chicago s reform history over four political eras revealing how corporate power was instrumental in designing and revamping the system Her narrative encompasses the formative era of 1880 1930 when teachers unions moderated business plans previously unexplored business activism from 1930 to 1980 when civil rights dominated school reform and the decentralization of the 1980s She also covers the uneasy cooperation among business associations in the 1990s to install the mayor as head of the school system a governing regime now challenged by privatization advocates Business people may be too wedded to a stunted view of educators to forge a productive partnership for change Unionized teachers bridle at the second class status accorded them by managers If reform is to reach deeply into classrooms Shipps concludes it might well require a new coalition of teachers unions and parents to create a fresh agenda that supersedes corporate interests This study clearly shows that in Chicago as elsewhere urban schooling is intertwined with politics and power By reviewing more than a century of corporate efforts to make education work Shipps makes a strong case that it s high time to look elsewhere perhaps to educators themselves for new leadership      Urban Management Bernard H. Ross,1979      Policy Studies Review Annual Stuart S. Nagel,1977-08-01      Educational Accountability Jacob Easley II,Pierre Tulowitzki,2016-04-28
