Costs of Illness Among Older Adults: An Analysis of Six Major Health Conditions with Significant Environmental Risk Factors George Van Houtven, Amanda Honeycutt, Boyd Gilman, Nancy McCall, Wanda W.

Throneburg, 2008-08-31 This study estimates the cost burden associated with six major illnesses among Americans age 65 or older chronic lung disease ischemic heart disease stroke lung cancer pneumonia and gastrointestinal illness These illnesses were selected because of their relatively high impact among older populations and because they include environmental exposures as a significant risk factor A prevalence based cost of illness approach was applied Medical costs were estimated from Medicare claims data in 2000 Productivity losses were estimated through regression analyses of National Health Interview Survey data and using age specific earnings and household production estimates Estimated costs range from 0.5 billion gastrointestinal illness to almost 60 billion ischemic heart disease The combined costs of these conditions among the 65 or older population in 2000 were almost 135 billion A simple extrapolation of these cost estimates based on population growth and increases in average medical care prices since 2000 implies that the comparable costs in 2007 were more than 196 billion With the expectation that these costs will continue to increase significantly as the population ages priority should be given to prevention strategies such as environmental quality improvements
