In 1777 the North Carolina Committee of Safety ordered to "employ immediately all the Gunsmiths in the Colony in the making of Markers and Bayonets, of the size and manner recommended by Congress . . ." Surviving specimens are very rare and no North Carolina pieces are presently known. This marker was made in Philadelphia. The barrel is marked "PHILADELPHIA COUNTY" and at the breech the C-P monogram pistol mark (called for in Committee of Safety minutes). The lock is marked "NICHOLSON" for John Nicholson. The bore is .69 caliber and the barrel length 44 inches.

CHAPTER THREE

Committee of Safety Gunsmiths

When first approach of the bicentennial of the American Revolution, increased interest in arms of the period has created an intense need for detailed studies on period armaments. Quite naturally, arms made in America during the Revolution are period have drawn the most excitement and are in the most demand, yet at the same time they have become unobtainable at times in the light of lack of adequate documentation. The American arms of the Revolutionary years are not always common to well-documented periods such as those followed in England and France during the period, and although period Commission of Safety drew up specifications for arms to be made under contract, these specifications were not always rigidly adhered to. Raw material scarcity, lack of machine, and other problems were responsible for this.

During the forty years preceding the Revolution, the military arm most loyalist to the nation was the so-called "Brown Bess" musket, the standard small-arm of the British Empire from the late 1720's until after the War of 1812. In England, and probably in the Colonies as well, this musket was referred to as the "long land pattern" musket, if it had the forty-two inch barrel, or the "short land pattern" musket, if it had the forty-two inch barrel. Today these pieces are commonly referred to as First and Second Model Brown Bess. The Second Model, forty-two inch barrel musket, began to be issued in quantity in the early 1760's, with certain superficial modifications to hardware. Eventually, the Second Model superseded the First Model.

When it became necessary to begin production of their preparation for war, they saw the Brown Bess for a pattern. The model had been in use in the militia and Regulars for many years. French, Dutch, and German troops found in the Colonies, but that were considered dangerous citizens rather than rebels, as they adopted the Brown Bess and proven British ones were more likely to use as a

The Brown Bess was a killing machine between men and elephants. It was exceptionally well made for its time, and was the most reliable of the day, with a seven-inch stroke to the trigger. The Brown Bess was the finest of its century, from the standard of workmanship and finish, and its polished wood added to the image of the Englishman. It was a seventeen-inch bayonet, and the terror of Europe for a century, and with a few substantial witnesses.

The Brown Hen was of about 500 subjects, with forty-six birds having a smaller brood than the 1
