Macroeconomic Adjustments:

Financial Crises and the Politics of Macroeconomic Adjustments Stefanie Walter, 2013-10-31 This book explains why governments respond differently to macroeconomic problems and why necessary reforms are sometimes delayed until a serious financial crisis erupts. It argues that voter vulnerability to different reform strategies varies and that these vulnerabilities influence the type and timing of governments' policy responses to economic crises. Empirical analyses at both the individual level across a broad range of countries and case studies of national policy responses to financial and economic crises in Asia and Eastern Europe support the argument.

Resources Booms and Macroeconomic Adjustments in Developing Countries Mamta Banu Chowdhury, 2017-11-28 Chowdhury addresses fundamental issues of policy management in resource based developing countries by providing an extension of the existing Dutch Disease theory and its applications to the developing country context. The impact of resources booms is of paramount importance for the developing economies. To date the analytical and empirical investigations of these issues have not been available. Essentially this study will fill this gap. The book investigates the macroeconomic impact of a resources boom and the long term growth implications of related policy choices with reference to Papua New Guinea. Like many other primary commodity exporting developing economies Papua New Guinea experienced several short lived export booms over the past two and a half decades providing a fascinating case study of potential gains from resources booms and the accompanying complex problems of policy management. This study also incorporates a comparative study of resources boom and policy management issues between Papua New Guinea, Indonesia and Nigeria.

Facing the Global Financial Cycle: What Role for Policy Nicoletta Batini, Luigi Durand, 2021-02-12 Abstract In this paper we ask whether countries can influence their exposure to changes in global financial conditions. Specifically we show that even though we can model cross country capital flows via a global factor that closely tracks changes in global financial conditions there is a large degree of heterogeneity in the sensitivity of each country to this same global factor. We then evaluate whether this cross country heterogeneity can be attributed to different policy choices including measures of capital flow management such as capital controls and macroprudential policies. In our main results we show that higher levels of capital controls and macroprudential policies both dampen the sensitivity to the global factor. Furthermore we show that countries' monetary and exchange rate policies can also be successfully deployed. Overall our results have implications that extend beyond the surge that preceded the 2008 global financial crisis and that closely resonate in light of the financial disruptions that followed the COVID 19 pandemic.
