On the night of August 1941, nearly two hundred men sought out the author in the village center of Chocoma, in the State of Tlaxcala. The inhabitants were told that they had discovered that a group of men were in the mountains, and were planning to assassinate the president. The author, as a representative of the government, was asked to lead a contingent of men to the mountains. The author, however, was not a soldier, and was not equipped with weapons. He was, however, a man of letters, and was known for his eloquence. He was, therefore, asked to lead a contingent of men to the mountains.
