New Economy, New Myth Jean Gadrey, 2002-11-28 With so much written about the new economy this book employs a mixture of academic rigour and readable prose making it a distinctive and intriguing read for those interested in the internet bubble and the furor that surrounded it New Economy, New Myth, 2003 The new economy has been criticised greatly of late and after the speculation and hype that surrounded the internet bubble this is hardly surprising This book first published in French and updated here however treats the new economy as a discourse one that is often misleading In order to understand what happened during the internet bubble and the fuss that surrounded it a central element intellectual speculation needs to be understood New Economy New Myth treats this speculation as a form of ultra free market thinking According to this line of thought the internet and the digital revolution are acting as a sort of Trojan horse in spreading market deregulation across the globe With so much having been written about the new economy this book employs a mixture of academic rigour and readable prose and comes as a welcome relief It will be an intriguing reading to those interested in the internet bubble and the hyperbole that surrounded it

This is Not Art Alana Jelinek, 2014-01-22 Art is not political action Art is not education Art does not exist to make society stronger or the world a better place Art disrupts and resists the comfortable the stiflingly familiar and the status quo or it only serves to deaden a disenfranchised society further So argues This Is Not Art a radical and vigorous critique that debunks myths about art in order to celebrate its real and unique importance With the postmodern deconstruction of now outdated shibboleths such as genius authenticity and beauty new and neoliberal myths about art have arisen to take their place that art's value is primarily monetary as a prized and marketable commodity or that art is important because it ameliorates social problems These ideas are not only the province of art dealers and power brokers but pervade the part of the artworld that defines itself as radical political or ethical too Highlighting the social mechanisms of legitimisation and dissemination that exclude the genuinely disruptive or defiant This Is Not Art draws on Foucault and Marx to uncover an artworld obsessed with profit and from which diversity individuality and freedom have been erased In the search for a new way to understand art's urgent importance Alana Jelinek returns to the question of what is art retelling the history of art practice for our contemporary moment and exposing the ways in which neoliberal norms and values have seeped into every aspect of our lives From the author's unique perspective as a practicing artist and theoretician This Is Not Art offers not just a searing criticism of the artworld as it is but a vision of a new way of understanding and practicing art as the embodiment of power and agency within us the possibility of thinking and acting differently of finding new stories to tell

Political Economy of the Environment

Simon Dietz, Jonathan Michie, Christine Oughton, 2011-02-01 This book is the culmination of several years work by a group of academics policy makers and other professionals looking to understand how alternative economic thinking and indeed thinking from quite different social scientific disciplines could enhance the mainstream economic approach to environmental and natural resource problems Of the editors Dietz comes from the mainstream economics tradition while Michie and Oughton draw explicitly on institutional and evolutionary economics The various authors represent a range of disciplinary backgrounds and approaches This book draws on the strengths of each and all of these approaches to analyse environmental issues and what can be done to tackle these through corporate and public policy The book argues that the need for an interdisciplinary approach Two themes which emerge repeatedly throughout the book are the need for an interdisciplinary theory of technological change and the need for a similarly interdisciplinary approach to the study of human behaviour and how it influences both production and consumption choices The two themes are of course related Resolving environmental questions requires an understanding of their nature of their causes and to the extent that they are anthropogenic of how to change human behaviour These fundamental issues are the focus of the four chapters that form Part 1 of this volume The remainder of the volume develops them in more detail

Economy Ron Martin, 2017-11-30 Economic geographers have always argued that space is key to understanding the economy that the processes of economic growth and development do not occur uniformly across geographic space but rather differ in degree and form as between different nations regions cities and localities with major implications for the geographies of wealth and welfare This was true in the industrial phase of global capitalism and is no less true in the contemporary era of post industrial knowledge driven global capitalism Indeed the marked changes occurring in the structure and operation of the economy in the sources of wealth creation in the organisation of the firm in the nature of work in the boundaries between market and state and in the regulation of the socio economy have stimulated an unprecedented wave of theoretical conceptual and empirical enquiry by economic geographers Even economists who traditionally have viewed the economy in non spatial terms as existing on the head of the proverbial pin are increasingly recognising the importance of space place and location to understanding economic growth technological innovation competitiveness and globalisation This collection of previously published work though containing but a fraction of the huge explosion in research and publication that has occurred over the past two decades seeks to convey a sense of this exciting phase in the intellectual development of the discipline and its importance in grasping the spatialities of contemporary economic life

Digital Rubbish Jennifer Gabrys, 2013-04-26. This is a study of the material life of information and its devices of electronic waste in its physical and electronic incarnations: a cultural and material mapping of the spaces where electronics in the form of both hardware and information accumulate, break down or are stowed away. Where other studies have addressed digital technology through a focus on its immateriality or virtual qualities, Gabrys traces the material, spatial, cultural and political infrastructures that enable the emergence and dissolution of these technologies. In the course of her book, she explores five interrelated spaces where electronics fall apart: from Silicon Valley to Nasdaq, from containers bound for China to museums and archives that preserve obsolete electronics as cultural artifacts to the landfill as material repository. Digital Rubbish: A Natural History of Electronics describes the materiality of electronics from a unique perspective, examining the multiple forms of waste that electronics create as evidence of the resources, labor and imaginaries that are bundled into these machines. Ranging across studies of media and technology as well as environments, geography and design, Jennifer Gabrys draws together the far-reaching material and cultural processes that enable the making and breaking of these technologies.

Canadian Economic History M.H. Watkins, 2000-02-17. Contemporary methodologies include the cliometric style of historical analysis, econometrics, labour and regional study and the changing parameters of government spending and public finance. The juxtaposition of classic theoretical statements with works by outsiders such as G.S. Kealey, B.D. Palmer, R.T. Naylor, R.E. Ommer among others makes this a solid yet innovative record of the progress in economics over the last forty years. Canadian Economic History remains an essential classroom text.
