prison cell in the autumn of 1944 Hans Fallada sums up his life under the National Socialist dictatorship the time of inward emigration Under conditions of close confinement in constant fear of discovery he writes himself free from the nightmare of the Nazi years His frank and sometimes provocative memoirs were thought for many years to have been lost They are published here in English for the first time The confessional mode did not come naturally to Fallada the writer of fiction but in the mental and emotional distress of 1944 self reflection became a survival strategy In the house of the dead he exacts his political revenge on paper I know that I am crazy I m risking not only my own life I m also risking the lives of many of the people I am writing about he notes driven by the compulsion to write And write he does about spying and denunciation about the threat to his livelihood and his literary work about the fate of many friends and contemporaries such as Ernst Rowohlt and Emil Jannings To conceal his intentions and to save paper he uses abbreviations His notes constantly exposed to the gaze of the prison warders become a kind of secret code He finally succeeds in smuggling the manuscript out of the prison although it remained unpublished for half a century These revealing memoirs by one of the best known German writers of the 20th century will be of great interest to all readers of modern literature Theatres of Memory Raphael Samuel, 1994 This work offers an overview of how the past has been manipulated in art politicized and sold to the consumer yet takes issue with those who claim this interest in heritage is merely obsessive nostalgia.
