

Abnormal Psychology – Unit One Lecture Outlines

Introduction

- Abnormal Behavior Definition
  - Difficult to define; examples:
    - Red-only clothing, woman wears only red clothing but it's all socially-appropriate
    - Test anxiety, boy vomits right before test, heart races, can't catch his breath
    - Depressed after spouse's death, married 35 yrs, heart attack, she becomes seriously depressed, loses appetite, difficulty sleeping, doesn't want to see friends, etc.
    - Fear of flying, insists on not flying, taking buses or trains everywhere, however, recently received promotion where travel is required
    - Organized cupboards, everything is alphabetically organized, beets, corn, etc.
    - 45 year old man notices lacking interest in sex, denies health and marriage problems, just doesn't have any interest anymore
      - Most of these are 'maybe'
- Five Definitions of Abnormal Behavior
  1. Violation of norms
    - Norms are rules that tell us what is right and wrong to do
    - Every human group lives by norms: when, how and with whom to do everything we do
      - i. Example: end of day, Norden has 4 oz. of white wine. How about 4 oz. of wine before work? That's a violation of norms
    - Positives: if a person is behaving according to norms, they're in touch with reality, they care about their behavior
    - Negatives: norms emerge from culture, vary across time and cultures, encourage conformity
      - i. Example: tattoos are now normal, but used to mean motorcycle gang or jail time
      - ii. Example: working mom is now normal and acceptable, used to be unacceptable/frowned upon
      - iii. Example: woman who wears red clothing is considered abnormal by this definition, but are they really? Or are they just unique and non-conformist?
  2. Statistical infrequency
    - Abnormality is any substantial deviation from a statistically calculated average
      - i. Example: you have the 'average mood', most days you're happier than not, etc. You have people on one end who are really depressed and sad, they're considered abnormal. You have people that are so happy and excited all the time,
