Immigration and Naturalization Service,1944 Saving the Overlooked Continent Hans Krabbendam,2020-09-15 How American Protestant missionaries created a new worldwide religious network Among a wide spectrum of American Protestants the horrors of World War II triggered grave concern for Europe s religious future They promptly mobilised resources to revive Europe s Christian foundation Saving the Overlooked Continent reconstructs this surprising redirection of Western missions For the first time Europe became the recipient of America s missionary enterprise The American missionary impulse matched the military economic and political programs of the U S all of which positioned the United States to become Europe's dominant partner and point of cultural reference. One result was the importation of the internal conflicts that vexed American Protestants: theological tensions between modernists and traditionalists and organisational competition between established churches and independent parachurch associations. Europe was offered a new slate of options that sparked civic and ecclesiastical responses. But behind these contending religious networks lay a considerable overlap of goals and means based on a shared missionary trajectory. By the mid 1960s most Protestant American agencies admitted that the expectation of a religious revival had been too optimistic despite their initiatives having led to an integration of Europe in the global evangelical network. The agencies reconsidered their assumptions and redefined their strategies. The initial opposition between inclusive and exclusive approaches abated and the path opened to a sustained cooperation among once fierce opponents.

Post-War Business Planners in the United States, 1939-48 Charlie Whitham, 2016-10-20 During the Second World War several independent business organizations in the US devoted considerable energy to formulating and advocating social and economic policy options for the US government for implementation after the war. This planning community of far sighted businessmen joined with academics and government officials in a nationwide endeavor to ensure that the colossal levels of productivity achieved by the US during wartime continued into the peace. At its core this effort was part of a wider struggle between liberals, moderates and conservatives over determining the economic and social responsibilities of government in the new post war order. In this book Charlie Whitham draws on an abundance of unpublished primary material from private and public archives that includes the minutes, memoranda, policy statements and research studies of the major post war business planning organisations on a wide range of topics including monetary policy, demobilization, labor policy, international trade and foreign affairs. This is the untold story of how the post war business planners of all hues helped shape the moderate consensus which prevailed after 1945 over a permanent but limited government responsibility for fiscal welfare and labor affairs, advanced American interests overseas and established.

Hearings United States Congress, House, 1951 No Exit James McAllister, 2018-09-05 James McAllister outlines a new account of early Cold War history, one that focuses on the emergence of a bipolar structure of power, the continuing importance of the German question and American efforts to create a united Western Europe. Challenging the conventional wisdom among both international relations theorists and Cold War historians, McAllister argues that America's central objective from the Second World War to the mid 1950s was to create a European order that could be peaceful and stable without requiring the permanent presence of American ground forces on the continent. The permanent presence of American forces in Europe is often seen as a lesson that policymakers drew from the disastrous experiences of two world wars, but McAllister's archival research reveals that both FDR and Eisenhower, as well as influential strategists such as George Kennan, did not draw this lesson. In the short term American power was necessary to balance the Soviet Union and reassure Western Europe about the revival of German power, but America's long term objective was to create the conditions under which Western Europe could take care of both of these problems on their own In the author's view the key element of this strategy was the creation of the European Defense Community If Western Germany could be successfully integrated and rearmed within the context of the EDC Western Europe would have taken the most important step to becoming a superpower on par with the United States and the Soviet Union Understanding why this strategy was pursued and why it failed McAllister asserts has important implications for both international relations theory and contemporary questions of American foreign policy

Europe United Sebastian Rosato, 2010-12-16 The construction of the European Community EC has widely been understood as the product of either economic self interest or dissatisfaction with the nation state system In Europe United Sebastian Rosato challenges these conventional explanations arguing that the Community came into being because of balance of power concerns France and the Federal Republic of Germany the two key protagonists in the story established the EC at the height of the cold war as a means to balance against the Soviet Union and one another More generally Rosato argues that international institutions whether military or economic largely reflect the balance of power In his view states establish institutions in order to maintain or increase their share of world power and the shape of those institutions reflects the wishes of their most powerful members Rosato applies this balance of power theory of cooperation to several other cooperative ventures since 1789 including various alliances and trade pacts the unifications of Italy and Germany and the founding of the United States Rosato concludes by arguing that the demise of the Soviet Union has deprived the EC of its fundamental purpose As a result further moves toward political and military integration are improbable and the economic community is likely to unravel to the point where it becomes a shadow of its former self
