

COMMON MARINE FISH OF AUSTRALIA

GOULD LEAGUE
No. 2 in a Series

Local names vary from state to state. Thus the Radfish is called Barramundi in southern states, the name being called Tiger Flathead and the young Tailor is referred to as Greenback in Victorian estuarine waters.

Most of the fish are sea-going but the Coral Trout and Coral Cod are tied to the northern reef areas. Others, like Trevalli, Whiting, and Flathead, haunt the port and sand bars. Many like the Sea Mullet, John Dory, Flounder, Snapper, Muller, Sea Bass, and Barramundi, enter the nursery for part of the year or spend their whole lives close to estuaries and river mouths.

Larger Snapper, Morwong, Lutterick, Garfish and Mulloway can sometimes be found around the rocks and jetties.

The fish are pointed in their most common color form, but it should be remembered that color will vary with age and locality. The brighter colors usually fade rapidly after death.

All the illustrated fish, except the sharks, lay eggs and belong to the family of bony fish. The two cartilaginous sharks shown give birth to up to 40 live young. Most Australian fish spawn in spring, some, like the Sea Mullet, producing only two million eggs.

An interesting activity is to collect radio information on fish marked in groups and numbers of hours and days. These could be placed in a demonstrative seasonal fluctuations over the year.

Another is to make the timing of each fish that is found on a rough and found up a chart, weathergram or logogram on the normal range of weather.

A good idea is to keep a fish diary which records the date of time and place where each species is caught and what sort of food was eaten.

The Gould League of Victoria promotes its thanks to the other Gould League and Australian Fisheries for permission to reproduce the illustrations.
