The Circular Flow Model and the Biosphere

The Economic System and the Environment

A basic building block of economic theory is the standard "circular flow" model of an economic system. As illustrated in Figure 1, this model shows the exchange of goods, services, and factors of production between two types of economic actors, consumers (households) and producers (firms). However, the environment and the natural resources which make economic production possible do not appear in the usual version of this model.

When a good or service is purchased, two kinds of flow occur: the good moves from the firm to the household and a corresponding payment moves from the household to the firm. Similarly, when firms purchase factors of production, a payment of money for the use of these factors accompanies the flow of factor services from households to firms. These transactions are symbolized on the graph in Figure 1 by the arrows going in both directions – from firms to households and vice versa. We distinguish between the two kinds of flows, real economic flows and the monetary flows which are their counterpart. The former are called "real" as they correspond to transfers of tangible things: goods and services flowing from firms to households; factors of production flowing from households to firms.

Can we locate the environment or natural resources in this picture? Certainly natural resources are essential to production: agriculture requires productive soils, industry requires fuels, water, and minerals. Consumers need drinking water, and many environmental resources, such as beaches and woodland, are in high demand. How is all this reflected in the circular flow?

Macroeconomics And The Environment Proceedings Of A Seminar May 1995:

Macroeconomics and the Environment Mr. Ved P. Gandhi, 1996-06-14 Microeconomic policies dealing with individual industries and economic sectors have traditionally addressed environmental concerns but increasingly the environment is being viewed in terms of the macro economy To improve its understanding of the interrelationship between macroeconomics and the environment the IMF held a seminar in May 1995 at which recognized experts from academic and research institutions nongovernmental organizations and staff from the World Bank and the IMF shared their views on how macroeconomic policies affect the environment and how environmental policies affect the macro economy The present volume edited by Ved P Gandhi contains the papers and proceedings of this seminar Economics and the Global Environment Charles S. Pearson, 2000-10-09 Economics and the Global Environment is a path breaking comprehensive analysis of how economic and environmental systems mesh in the international context The book investigates if and how environmental resources such as global climate genetic diversity and transboundary pollution can be managed in an international system of sovereign states without a Global Environment Protection Agency It also considers traditional international economics theory and policy and explores how they can be expanded to accommodate environmental values Until recently trade theory and trade policy neglected pollution and environmental degradation This situation has changed dramatically and the controversial and corrosive issues of trade and the environment are here given careful analysis These topics are enriched by a concise presentation of the principles of environmental economics and a thoughtful treatment of sustainable development The book will appeal to students and practitioners of trade and development as well as the environmental community Index of Conference Proceedings British Library.
