

Laura Mondorfer presents AIM's Tax Reform Proposal at the Budget Hearing on May 10. The Hearing before the full Board of Aldermen was attended by eighty people, a lower than expected turn-out.

AIM Seeks Tax Reform Makes Bid At Hearing

by Matt Borenstein
Modern Times Staff

The American Independent Movement (AIM) has made some far-reaching proposals for tax reform in New Haven that could have city residents up to 30 cents in property taxes.

AIM explained its proposals at an administrative hearing on next week's city budget held at the Hall of Records on May 10. Mayor Gudda's budget for next year calls for a 3.3 mill tax cut (84.3 to 81.2). This modest reduction, maintained Laura Mondorfer speaking for AIM, does not come close to addressing the needs of New Haven citizens for a drastic reduction in their tax burden.

At the same time, according to AIM's testimony, the budget does not deal with the inadequate and deteriorating public services in the city. For example, the budget only calls for a 1.8% increase in expenditures on education. With teachers' salaries going up 3% next year and the cost of supplies rising at an inflationary rate of over 4%, the conditions in New Haven's schools will continue to grow worse next year.

Taxal Revision

AIM proposed a total revision of the tax structure so that we would not be forced in future years to accept the high-tax, low service budget again. First, a great deal of property is held by wealthy individuals and corporations in Connecticut in the form of stocks and bonds. This property should be taxed in the same way as real estate or automobiles. (See TAX WEALTHY on page 7 for an analysis of this tax.)

Secondly, property taxes should be progressive. That is, a small homeowner or small businessman should not pay property taxes at the same rate as the owner of a $250,000 mansion or a large corporation. Third, Yale University should be taxed at the same rate as any other property holder in the city.

These newly designed property taxes should be imposed on a state-wide basis so that rich individuals or corporations could not escape paying their share by moving to other suburbs.

These proposals for tax reform would require changes in both state and city constitutions and would require a referendum. Citizens should be given every opportunity to vote for the most equitable system for the next year.

Fiscal Stabilization

Mayor Gudda's testimony at the hearing, read by Board of Aldermen president Vincent Mauro, called the proposed budget an example of "municipal services substitution." The Mayor claimed that revenue sharing funds enabled him to take care of the increased costs due to inflation while keeping city services at the same level.

Clara D. Martino, vice president of the New Haven PTA, should pointed out that (see TAX, page 7)

Revenue Sharing: City Loses Out

by Jeffrey Shannon

The government will never let another New Haven's "federal" aid program be ending. But what is the city's losing from "revenue sharing"?

The idea of revenue sharing is often to ten years old, originating in the Johnson Administration. An experienced secretary, Joseph Heller, anticipated a large surplus in the Federal Treasury when the Vietnam War ended. He saw that state and local governments had been rising economically for 25 years.

NEWS ANALYSIS

In fact, between 1960 and 1970, state and local expenditures relying on regressive property and sales taxes rose over 30%. Yet, even with this tremendous increase and even with the specific domestic grants of the "Great Society", the cities still need much more money to pay for the necessary social services to their citizens.

Heller thought this surplus could be retained by dispersing the surplus to underdeveloped areas to the states and cities. The advantage of these block grants over simply reducing income taxes was that the income tax is a relatively progressive tax, that is, a tax which takes proportionately more from the wealthy. (Except of course for all the loopholes...) 3

The states and cities on the other hand rely predominantly on sales and property taxes (e.g. Connecticut and New Haven) which are regressive; that is, they take more from the poorest.

Good As First

So, it would seem that revenue sharing as originally conceived was a pretty good idea. In reality, the revenue sharing is a city progressive way by the Federal Government and give it to wealthy local governments whose only other source of revenue was state-mandated and regressive taxes. A good idea the President Nixon got a hold of in that he

Nixon changed one of the fundamental aspects of this revenue sharing idea, that is, would be in addition to other Federal grants.

After telling the idea to the nation's Mayor and Governor, and finally to Congress, the revenue sharing program was passed. The federal government would make a choice to increase rather than decrease the military budget at the next second phase the city would not increase and to big business and industry.

The result of Nixon's "progressive" revenue sharing has been disastrous for America's cities. Diverse and minor cities centers have been forced to raise taxes and cut services. The city of New Haven has lost $20 million.

New Haven Lost: $20 Million
How does it all affect New Haven? In the coming fiscal year which begins this July, the city stands to lose at least $5 million. (Probably much more from budget cuts and cuts in services.) (see R2 and WUE, page 6)
