

Out of the minds of babes . . .

By Susanna French

Special to The Denver Post

When Phil Watkins' ancestors moved their century-old stained-glass business to Denver in the 1860s, they could not have imagined that their descendants would be designing astronauts into windows.

But as of last week, anyone who enters the Edwin A. Bemis Public Library in Littleton can see the Watkins family's latest work of art, astronauts and all.

Designed in honor of Littleton's centennial celebrations last year, the windows hang at the entrance to the library's children's room. The handpainted panels are arranged like a quilt, with a log-cabin quilt pattern woven among the images.

Stained-glass images grace library

Library Director Margery Smith said the pattern was a great idea because quilts are a running theme in the children's room.

For 11 years, kids from local schools have hung story quilts on the walls, drawing pictures from favorite stories in each square. The windows extend the idea, using images from Colorado history, children's literature and nature.

The project was conceived by library staff member Phyllis Larison, who said people had a hard time finding the children's room before the windows went in.

Larison had seen how other libraries used colorful entrances to set off their children's areas, and knew the library needed a project for the town's centennial celebration.

About two years ago, she approached Watkins, who had created windows for Larison's church, and raised $9,000 through private donations.

Jane Watkins, Phil's wife, said this was the first project in the business' more than 200-year history that involved the whole family. Daughter Amanda, 13, picked pictures from her favorite children's books, "Winnie the Pooh," "Charlotte's Web" and "Goodnight Moon."

Jane Watkins said their daughter Kitt, 13, works well with molten lead, so Kitt made small glass quilt squares that were sold as souvenirs to raise money for the windows.

Their oldest daughter, Sally, 18, helped install the windows last week. Jane designed the three 6-foot-by-2½-foot panes, and Phil built them.

The images of nature and history were gathered by librarian Heather McNeil.

Using subjects kids most often asked her about, McNeil incorporated a range of pictures, from astronauts to dinosaurs, trains to fairies.

"It has everything the library has: fantasy, information, fun, color, knowledge, all of which is going on in the children's room," McNeil said.

Dharma talks Pema Rigtsal has studied and lived with several authentic Dzogchen masters and has surprising stories to tell about their unconventional methods to introduce students to the subtle view of Dzogchen.
