

The background of the entire image is a dense, abstract pattern. It consists of numerous small, overlapping circles in a wide variety of colors, including red, orange, yellow, green, blue, purple, and black. These circles are set against a dark brown, textured background that resembles a coarse fabric or a mottled paint. The circles themselves have a slightly irregular, hand-painted appearance, with some showing darker centers or gradients.

Printing Art, 1917 Art and Posthumanism Cary Wolfe, 2022-02-15 A sustained engagement between contemporary art and philosophy relating to our place in and responsibility to the nonhuman world How do contemporary art and theory contemplate the problem of the bio of biopolitics and bioart How do they understand the question of life that binds human and nonhuman worlds in their shared travail In Art and Posthumanism Cary Wolfe argues for the reconceptualization of nature in art and theory to turn the idea of the relationship between the human and the planet upside down Wolfe explores a wide range of contemporary artworks from Sue Coe's illustrations of animals in factory farms and Eduardo Kac's bioart to the famous performance pieces of Joseph Bueys and the video installations of Eija Liisa Ahtila among others examining how posthumanist theory can illuminate and be illuminated by artists' engagement with the more than human world Looking at biological and social systems the question of the animal and biopolitics Art and Posthumanism explores how contemporary art rivets our attention on the empirically thick emotionally charged questions of life and the living amid ecological catastrophe One of the foremost theorists of posthumanism Wolfe pushes that philosophy out of the realm of the purely theoretical to show how a posthumanist engagement with particular works and their conceptual underpinnings help to develop more potent ethical and political commitments
