Assisted Conception: Research, Ethics and Law Jennifer Gunning, 2017-11-01 This title was first published in 2003 Assisted conception is an area where it often seems that all the ethical and legal issues have been covered and then technology advances and the discussions start all over again The book is an anthology of papers presented during a project looking at therapeutic research in assisted conception TRAC It is divided into three areas addressing research ethics and law Each chapter begins with an overview of the issues with the aim being to present new perspectives rather than covering old ground The European Convention on Human rights and Biomedicine came into force on December 1 1999 The

Convention allows therapeutic research and research on spare embryos but forbid fundamental research which may be essential to the safe development of new techniques This also means that people may become part of an experimental process without their consent The project brings together clinicians embryologists lawyers and ethicists to ascertain whether there might be a risk of infertility patients being exposed to insufficiently tested procedures and to see if there is a need for fundamental research in this area It also looks at the legislative safeguards that exist and whether a European standard for treatment should be set

Progress in Hormone Biochemistry and Pharmacology M. Briggs, A. Corbin, 2012-12-06 Somatostatin was discovered in 1971 by Guillemin and his colleagues during their search for the hypothalamic growth hormone releasing factor A peptide was found in ovine hypothalamus which inhibited the release of growth hormone from cultured anterior pituitary cells 1 2 Determination 3 of its amino acid sequence indicated that it was a tetradecapeptide with a molecular weight of 1639 Figure 1J An identical peptide was later isolated from porcine hypothalamus by Schally and his coworkers 4 The peptide was named somatostatin in the belief that it was a hypothalamic releasing factor whose sole function was to inhibit the secretion of growth hormone It soon became evident however that a peptide with identical immunologic characteristics and biologic activity was present in the D cells of pancreatic islets in D like cells of the gastrointestinal tract in parafollicular cells of the thyroid gland and in extrahypothalamic neurons of both the central and peripheral nervous system in various species including man Moreover studies employing synthetic somatostatin 5 demonstrated that the peptide possessed a wide spectrum of biologic activities in addition to its inhibition of growth hormone
