

AV-8B HARRIER II PLUS

• Latest Harrier variant • Air-to-air capability • Export orders

Internationally recognized as one of the most potent and versatile weapons in service, the original second-generation Harrier II was generated by its lack of radar. In the UK, British Aerospace (BAe) had produced the Sea Harrier by adding radar to the basic Harrier, a trend that has been repeated with the Harrier II Plus. With the JFQ-65 radar from the F/A-18A Hornet, the Harrier II Plus has gained a formidable beyond-visual-range (BVR) capability.

Currently almost indistinguishable from the standard AV-8B, the Harrier II Plus embodies many improvements, including a new radar, new weapons and an upgraded engine.

First rebuild
Unpainted and showing the various different structural materials, the first rebuild Harrier II Plus performs a fly-in.

'Flying Tigers'
The first unit of the US Marine Corps to receive the Harrier II Plus was VMFA-542, which has deployed to the Gulf in 1991. One of its aircraft is seen here displaying its 52 Squadron Devils during a training sortie.

European operators
Italy and Spain have purchased the latest AV-8B. Both countries employ the aircraft primarily in the air defence role.

4 Variations in colour
Different paint schemes can be seen on the Harrier II Plus. Most sport two-tone (light/dark), though these two examples have much darker upper surfaces.

Reduction in orders
Originally it was hoped that the entire USMC fleet would be upgraded to Harrier II Plus standard, but defence cutbacks during the 1990s have reduced the total to 88 aircraft.

FACTS AND FIGURES

- Since the first Harrier II Plus took to the air in 1986, engine failure has resulted in one of the programme's weaknesses.
- A primary motivation for the programme was experience from the Gulf War.
- It is hoped that all of the improved AV-8Bs will be delivered by 2005.
- All the Harrier II Plus variants are to receive entirely new weapons. This is expected to be completed by the end of 1999.
- The introduction of the new aircraft has resulted in a true multi-role Harrier.
- Italy has been the first country to acquire Harriers before single-seat variants.

PROFILE

Harrier II receives an update

Already a proven fighter with the advanced AV-8B Harrier II Plus, the Harrier II Plus now receives an all-around fighter, with the capability to enhance its range using AV-8B Harrier II Plus and AV-8B Harrier II Plus. The Harrier II Plus retains the close support capability of its predecessor, but adds an important air defence role.

These updates to Harrier II Plus are a major update, the last 1990. Italy, Spain and the US have signed a major agreement for Harrier II Plus funding. The first prototype flew in 20 September 1991.

Above: Another feature has been to increase the number of wing pylons from six to eight, as well as the AV-8B's aircraft. The new AV-8B and AV-8B Harrier II Plus can be carried.

Left: Pilots have welcomed the introduction of the new aircraft and one, serving with VMFA-542 'Flying Tigers', went so far as to describe it as a 'fourth leg for the Harrier'.

AV-8B Harrier II Plus

BAE-106000 was one of the first Harrier II Plus variants to be delivered, being built to change its role to 'Flying Tigers' or 'Flying Tigers' (F/T) Harrier, which has been a number of US Marine Corps Harrier operations since the early 1990s.
