Learning Disability and Inclusion Phobia C. F. Goodey, 2015-10-05 The social position of learning disabled people has shifted rapidly over the last 20 years from long stay institutions first into community homes and day centres and now to a currently emerging goal of ordinary lives for individuals using person centred support and personal budgets These approaches promise to replace a century and a half of scientific pathological models based on expert assessment and of the accompanying segregated social administration which determined how and where people led their lives and who they were This innovative volume explains how concepts of learning disability intellectual disability and autism first came about describes their more recent evolution in the formal disciplines of psychology and shows the direct relevance of this historical knowledge to present and future policy practice and research Goodey argues that learning disability is not a historically stable category and different people are considered learning disabled as it changes over time

Using psychological and anthropological theory he identifies the deeper lying pathology as inclusion phobia in which the tendency of human societies to establish an in group and to assign out groups reaches an extreme point Thus the disability we call intellectual is a concept essential only to an era in which to be human is essentially to be deemed intelligent autonomous and capable of rational choice Interweaving the author s historical scholarship with his practice based experience in the field Learning Disability and Inclusion Phobia challenges myths about the past as well as about present day concepts exposing both the historical continuities and the radical discontinuities in thinking about learning disability

All We Have to Fear Allan V. Horwitz, PhD, Jerome C. Wakefield, DSW, PhD, 2012-04-01 Thirty years ago it was estimated that less than five percent of the population had an anxiety disorder Today some estimates are over fifty percent a tenfold increase Is this dramatic rise evidence of a real medical epidemic In All We Have to Fear Allan Horwitz and Jerome Wakefield argue that psychiatry itself has largely generated this epidemic by inflating many natural fears into psychiatric disorders leading to the over diagnosis of anxiety disorders and the over prescription of anxiety reducing drugs American psychiatry currently identifies disordered anxiety as irrational anxiety disproportionate to a real threat Horwitz and Wakefield argue to the contrary that it can be a perfectly normal part of our nature to fear things that are not at all dangerous from heights to negative judgments by others to scenes that remind us of past threats as in some forms of PTSD Indeed this book argues strongly against the tendency to call any distressing condition a mental disorder To counter this trend the authors provide an innovative and nuanced way to distinguish between anxiety conditions that are psychiatric disorders and likely require medical treatment and those that are not the latter including anxieties that seem irrational but are the natural products of evolution The authors show that many commonly diagnosed irrational fears such as a fear of snakes strangers or social evaluation have evolved over time in response to situations that posed serious risks to humans in the past but are no longer dangerous today Drawing on a wide range of disciplines including psychiatry evolutionary psychology sociology anthropology and history the book illuminates the nature of anxiety in America making a major contribution to our understanding of mental health

Panic and Phobias 2 Iver Hand, Hans-Ulrich Wittchen, 2012-12-06 This volume reports in four sections the most recent developments of treatments in anxiety disorders The current well elaborated though partly controversial behavioral cognitive psychophysiological and biological concepts for treatment of anxiety disorders are carefully evaluated Part I Part II discusses results of the short and long term effectiveness of the respective treatment methods their side effects and failures Promising new basic experimental and clinical studies from twenty research centers in Europe Australia and the United States shed new light on the relevant behavioral and biological variables and mechanisms involved in the development Part III as well as in the course and outcome of anxiety disorders Part IV Thus for the clinician as well as for the researcher this book provides the most up to date information about the current state of treatment relevant research in panic and phobias
