Atlas of Atherosclerosis Peter W.F. Wilson, 2013-11-11 We are in the early years of a new millennium. Tremendous interest is now focused on atherosclerosis, and atherosclerotic disease is now the leading cause of death in the United States. The characteristics of atherosclerotic disease are thought to underlie more adult deaths than any other disease on the planet. The coronary events are attributable to unstable atherosclerotic plaques, as we recognize that many clinical events do not cause severe stenoses but are prone to rupture and precipitate angina or a myocardial infarction. A variety of factors are under study to help determine what affects the balance between plaque stability and instability. Some of this research is fueled by the fact that therapy for atherosclerosis in more recent times has shown that fatty streak lesions are related to the lipoprotein cholesterol alterations very common in young adults. Recent studies but stem from the pleiotropic effects of such medications on hematologic and inflammatory mechanisms milieu that foster the creation of these lesions. The current volume focuses on the early lesions.
