Implementing Objective 17 of the New Zealand Tertiary Education Strategy Vicky Adin,2006-09-30 The philosophy of lifelong learning is not a new concept and for many decades governments worldwide have debated what form a policy and resourcing framework should take that would help people raise their skill levels to meet the challenges presented to society entering the 21st century New Zealand is no different The introduction of the Tertiary Education Strategy in 2002 sought to create that framework by developing six strategic priorities that would raise skill levels improve quality of provision cater for the more disadvantaged and provide New Zealand with strong economic and social outcomes In 2005 at the mid way point of the Strategy s implementation this thesis seeks to determine if the Strategy is in fact creating a framework that will achieve a prosperous and confident knowledge society The focus of this study was the implementation process of the first part of Objective 17 Improved linkages between secondary and tertiary education as a key indicator of Strategy Three Raising Foundation Skills so that all people can participate in our knowledge society The methodology chosen for this research was a qualitative methodology using an inductive and interpretivist approach This approach allows patterns themes and categories of analysis to emerge from the data and allows researchers to remain open to the unexpected and to change the direction or focus of a research project Research essentially fulfils three roles it explores the issues discovering if something exists it defines and differentiates the object of the study and explains it contextually The research for this thesis involved three secondary schools three tertiary providers three government agencies and a document review The three main data collection methods used were interviews document analysis and written questions Data analysis was completed using evaluative research techniques The thesis is descriptive in presentation The results indicated that the application of Objective 17 has improved linkages between tertiary and secondary education pathways are being created and there is a growing awareness of the necessity for lifelong learning Nevertheless the development of a culture of lifelong learning and the knowledge society are still someway in the future Three major themes were identified that could impede the success of the Strategy however the vision of a prosperous and confident knowledge society is achievable   Why Companies Do Not Pursue Attractive Mergers and Acquisitions Richard B. Connell,2008 There are substantial bodies of literature that advance theory about why merger and acquisition candidates are found to be unattractive why negotiations are not concluded and why the benefits of companies that are acquired are not realised Little if any research identifies why merger and acquisition opportunities are not pursued in the period after candidates are analysed and found to be attractive but before negotiations begin This study addresses this period by developing a theoretical framework of the variables that intervene to reverse decisions to pursue apparently attractive candidates before negotiations begin and which in doing so result in missed opportunities The study is informed primarily by the strategic management content literature but draws from the strategy process literature including streams in strategic decision making SDM and behavioural decision theory BDT This is a critical book for business scholars that provides an important perspective that has not yet been studied Environmental Practice in Program Management Offices George Noble,1995 Migration of Farm Workers to Rural Scotland Dr. Iqbal Md Mostafa,2018-08-30 The migration of farm workers to rural Scotland is an important issue that relates to the existing theories and research in contemporary equality and cultural capital studies particularly in regard to the exploration of how and in what ways cultural capital theory can be addressed to study migrants equality claims the examination of how complex equality models can be used for inquiry into the reinforcement of inequalities in cultural capital and the accumulative effects of such inequality In particular the experiences of East European migrant farm workers challenge theoretical perspectives that apply a an approach of equality claim from cultural capital which emphasize b equal right to recognition and therefore c focus on entitlement to equal protection against any discrimination This book therefore offers us a way to explore these experiences with a call for attention to be paid to a large number of East European migrant farm workers who have migrated to rural Scotland to work in low paid jobs marked with low skills Unlike majority members of a population migrant farm workers often give up their cultural capital and take up low skilled jobs in order to gain opportunities for success in other spheres in their lives Critiquing such a trade off approach if the sphere of migrants cultural capital is invaded and the cultural capital of local workers native is acknowledged migrants are in a vulnerable position I also argue although migrants achievements are devalued and their substantive equality remains unprotected their claim from cultural capital is relatively strong and valid to manage The more vulnerable a migrants cultural capital is in terms of recognition and protection the stronger his or her claim from cultural capital will be Under the theoretical framework I argue that if equal recognitions of cultural capital are not actively ensured this is highly likely to produce increased claims to equality Preparing Teachers to Teach the STEM Disciplines in America's Urban Schools Cheryl J.
