Discussing the future of research in public administration (PA) is more than just listing topics for research which are inspired by possible future challenges for the public sector. Even if national contexts determine a strong path dependency for research agendas, there are four major trends which affect the future of PA research: Europeanisation, reform agendas, globalisation issues, and marketisation of research. A crucial element in the debate is to know what the specific European voice is and should be in PA research. For this purpose it is necessary to explicitly organise research in PA.

Looking at the main influences and dynamics, it is important to see how the future of researching public administration could look like, and perhaps should look like. The difference between “should” and “could” depends on these influences and dynamics, e.g. our debates and academic agenda setting, but also resources in money and people, hazard (such as a sudden crisis of governance of the banking sector), or perhaps on serendipity (like the use of cultural theory from anthropologists).

It is useful to focus on some aspects of this future, also from the point of view of how to shape the research in public administration in the next decades. This is a

White,2001-12 The logic of research in public administration argues Jay D White may be more like that of storytelling than of conventional social science research In Talking Language Seriously he examines the linguistic discursive and narrative foundations of public administration research and develops a narrative theory of knowledge development and use for the field White builds his case for this narrative theory by showing how research on complex problems is grounded in language and discourse He then explains how a variety of recent developments in philosophy and the humanities positivism postpositivism hermeneutics critical and legal theory postmodernism and poststructuralism can contribute to our understanding of public administration research Focusing on the logical structures of three modes of research explanatory interpretive and critical White shows how each is equally legitimate depending on the nature of the research questions This comprehensive yet clear discussion of the philosophical foundations of research in public administration advances an alternative theory of knowledge development that will be valuable for everyone in fields seeking to affect social political economic and organizational change     Public Administration Norma M. Riccucci,2010-06-16 Is public administration an art or a science This question of whether the field is driven by values or facts will never be definitively answered due to a lack of consensus among scholars The resulting divide has produced many heated debates however in this pioneering volume Norma Riccucci embraces the diversity of research methods rather than suggesting that there is one best way to conduct research in public administration Public Administration examines the intellectual origins and identity of the discipline of public administration its diverse research traditions and how public administration research is conducted today The book s intended purpose is to engage reasonable minded public administration scholars and professionals in a dialogue on the importance of heterogeneity in epistemic traditions and to deepen the field s understanding and acceptance of its epistemological scope This important book will provide a necessary overview of the discipline for graduate students and scholars     Introduction to Research in Public Administration and Related Academic Disciplines Petrus Brynard,S.
