Robertson argues that the constitutional judge's role is nothing like that of the legislator or chief executive or even the ordinary judge. Rather, constitutional judges spell out to society the implications on the ground of the moral and practical commitments embodied in the nation's constitution. Constitutional review in other words is a form of applied political theory. Robertson takes an in-depth look at constitutional decision making in Germany, France, the Czech Republic, Poland, Hungary, Canada, and South Africa, with comparisons throughout to the United States where constitutional review originated. He also tackles perhaps the most vexing problem in constitutional law today: how and when to limit the rights of citizens in order to govern. As traditional institutions of moral authority have lost power, constitutional judges have stepped into the breach, radically altering traditional understandings of what courts can and should do. Robertson demonstrates how constitutions are more than mere founding documents laying down the law of the land but increasingly have become statements of the values and principles a society seeks to embody. Constitutional judges in turn see it as their mission to transform those values into political practice and push for state and society to live up to their ideals. Congressional Record United States.

Carr V. Gateway, Inc, 2009. The Supreme Court in a Separation of Powers System Richard Pacelle, 2015-01-09. The U.S. Supreme Court is not a unitary actor and it does not function in a vacuum. It is part of an integrated political system in which its decisions and doctrine must be viewed in a broader context. In some areas, the Court is the lead policy maker. In other areas, the Court fills in the gaps of policy created in the legislative and executive branches. In either instance, the Supreme Court's work is influenced by and in turn influences all three branches of the federal government as well as the interests and opinions of the American people. Pacelle analyzes the Court's interaction in the separation of powers system.
