Map Of Destiny Pinpointing A Cancer Epidemic On The Kitchen Table:

Map of Destiny Joan Swirsky, 2005-11 Lorraine Pace got breast cancer and then learned that 20 of her neighbours also suffered from the disease But when she realised that the medical and science establishments didn't believe in clusters she set about to prove them wrong This book features her story Mobilizing Science Sabrina McCormick, 2009 Mobilizing Science theoretically and empirically explores the rise of a new kind of social movement one that attempts to empower citizens through the use of expert scientific research Sabrina McCormick advances theories of social movements development and science and technology studies by examining how these fields intersect in cases around the globe McCormick grounds her argument in two very different case studies the anti dam movement in Brazil and the environmental breast cancer prevention movement in the U S These and many other cases show that the scientization of society where expert knowledge is inculcated in multiple institutions and lay people are marginalized give rise to these new types of movements While activists who consequently engage in science often instigate new methods that result in new findings and scientific tools these movements still often fail due to superficial participatory institutions and tightly knit corporate government relationships The New York Times Index, 2006 Books In Print 2004-2005 Ed Bowker Staff, Staff Bowker, Ed, 2004 Cancer Mapping Peter Boyle, Calum S. Muir, Ekkehard Grundmann, 2012-12-06 The preceding decade has seen the production of many cancer atlases As with other techniques of descriptive epidemiology these atlases have proved valuable in identifying areas for further research employing the methods of analytical epidemiology However the various cancer atlases produced to date have failed to provide a common format of presentation which has limited their comparability and frustrated in a large measure any attempt to compare risks across national boundaries boundaries which in terms of environmental exposures may have little meaning In this volume many features of cancer atlases are presented and there are discussions on the areas where moves towards standardization could greatly increase the utility of the finished product In contrast to topographic maps i.e. representations of natural and man made features on the surface of the earth thematic maps concentrate on displaying the geographical occurrence and variation of a single phenomenon the theme of the map The link between thematic and base mapping is rather strong as the thematic information to be depicted is of greater value if displayed on an accurate base map Further the thematic map generally uses statistical data which are frequently related to internal administrative boundaries for enumeration The major reason for constructing a thematic map is to discover the spatial structure of the theme of the map and to then relate the structure to some aspects of the underlying environment
