technicians and staff were to build the foundations of a new wireless age Soon the Hall Street Works would send equipment to the Boer War the Chinese Boxer Rebellion and supply the huge Poldhu and Clifden transatlantic stations In December 1901 against all the odds Marconi managed to receive a wireless message sent across the Atlantic Ocean over 2 170 miles and much of the equipment was built in the Hall Street Works Despite Marconi and his Company becoming world famous it was still a desperate struggle to find paying customers for his new wire less system On 8th May 1901 the Royal Navy would place the first order for 32 sets which was increased to 108 sets by 1905 The Hall Street Works then supplied all the equipment for Marconi s growing network of coastal wireless stations and started to equip increasing numbers of civilian ships The factory supplied customers across the globe including the Amazon Basin Hawaii Congo Thailand South Africa India Canada and even to both sides in the Balkan War of 1912 It was Marconi wireless equipment manufactured in Hall Street installed aboard the ill fated RMS Titanic that saved over 730 people when the great ship was lost in 1912 and over 760 people when the RMS Lusitania was sunk in May 1915 This successful use of wireless for safety at sea effectively generated a new and vast market for Marconi s equipment In the same year the Hall Street Works officially closed its doors as the huge New Street Works took over the workload and the world s first wireless factory fell silent apart from its wireless station across the road that continued to eavesdrop on the German fleet feeding vital intelligence to the Navy s top secret Room 40 code breakers It was this and all the work done at Hall Street that ensured that Britain and the Marconi Company were ready to face the extreme demands of a world now at war
