The Italians Frances Elliot,1875 The Italians Elliot,1875 The Italians: A Novel Frances Minto Dickinson

Elliot,2020-09-28 We are at Lucca It is the 13th of September 1870 the anniversary of the festival of the Volto Santo a notable day both in city suburb and province Lucca dearly loves its festivals no city more and of all the festivals of the year that of the Volto Santo best Now the Volto Santo Anglic Holy Countenance is a miraculous crucifix which hangs as may be seen all by itself in a gorgeous chapel more like a pagoda than a chapel and more like a glorified bird cage than either built expressly for it among the stout Lombard pillars in the nave of the cathedral The crucifix is of cedar wood very black and very ugly and it was carved by Nicodemus of this fact no orthodox Catholic entertains a doubt But on what authority I cannot tell nor why nor how the Holy Countenance reached the snug little city of Lucca except by flying through the air like the Loretto house or springing out of the earth like the Madonna of Feltri But here it is and here it has been for many a long year and here it will remain as a miraculous relic bringing with it blessings and immunities innumerable to the grateful city What a glorious morning it is The sun rose without a cloud Now there is a golden haze hanging over the plain and glints as of living flame on the flanks of the mountains From all sides crowds are pressing toward Lucca Before six o clock every high road is alive Down from the highest mountain top of Pizzorna overlooking Florence and its vine garlanded campagna comes the hermit brown draped in hood and mantle staff in hand he trudges along the dusty road And down too from his native lair among the pigs and the poultry comes the black eyed black skinned matted haired urchin who makes mud pies under the tufted ilex trees at Ponte a Moriano and swears at the hermit They come they come From mountain sides bordering the broad road along the Serchio mountains dotted with bright homesteads each gleaming out of its own cypress grove olive patch canebreak and vine arbor under which the children play they come from solitary hovels hung up as it were in mid air over gloomy ravines scored and furrowed with red earth down which dark torrents dash and spray The Diary of John Evelyn
