people in late imperial China in the context of their migrations in search of economic opportunities. It poses three central questions: What determined the temporal and geographic pattern of Hakka and Pengmin (a largely Hakka speaking people) migration in this era? In what circumstances and over what issues did ethnic conflict emerge? How did the Chinese state react to the phenomena of migration and ethnic conflict? To answer these questions, a model is developed that brings together three ideas and types of data: the analytical concept of ethnicity, the history of internal migration in China, and the regional systems methodology of G. William Skinner, which has been both a breakthrough in the study of Chinese society and an approach of broad social scientific application. Professor Skinner has also prepared eleven maps for the book as well as the Introduction. The book is in two parts. Part I describes the spread of the Hakka throughout the Lingnan and to a lesser extent the Southeast Coast macroregions. It argues that this migration occurred because of upswings in the macroregional economies in the sixteenth century and in the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries. As long as economic opportunities were expanding, ethnic antagonisms were held in check. When however the macroregional economies declined in the mid-seventeenth and late eighteenth centuries, ethnic tensions came to the fore, notably in the Hakka Punti War of the mid-nineteenth century. Part II broadens the analysis to take into account other Hakka speaking people, notably the Pengmin or shak people. When new economic opportunities opened up, the Pengmin moved to the peripheries of most of the macroregions along the Yangtze valley, particularly to the highland areas close to major trading centers. As with the Hakka, ethnic antagonisms, albeit differently expressed, emerged as a result of a declining economy and increased competition for limited resources in the main areas of Pengmin concentration.
