
AC1.5 - Impact of media representation on the public perception of crime

MORAL PANIC

- The media often reports crimes in a certain way in order to cause moral panic which causes an overly exaggerated reaction by society to a problem. The media usually finds a particular group to target as folk devils (folk devil is a person or group of people who are portrayed in folklore or the media as outsiders and deviant, and who are blamed for crimes or other sorts of social problems)
- The seriousness of the crime is often exaggerated and blown out of proportion to the actual event.

Negative impact

- An example of this is the mods and rockers, where two different groups of youths got involved in a disturbance in 1964 which resulted in minor property damage.
- The media's coverage of this event blew the actual events of the crime out of proportion. The media highlighted the difference in the groups.
- They distorted the number of people involved and the seriousness.
- Other examples – panic buying COVID, Petrol incident.

DEVIANCE AMPLIFICATION MODEL

- The media can also amplify deviance, sometimes when authorities try to maintain deviance, it can actually end up producing more deviance.
- With the mod and rockers the media made it seem like the problem was out of control of the police which resulted in the public calling to suggest a more forceful way of controlling the juvenile delinquents.

Positive impact

- Moral panics can help bring police attention to certain crimes and pressure the government to make a change.
- With the Momo challenge that was trending online, the moral panic helped warn the public specifically schools and parents with young children to be careful online. Also helped authorities discover the challenge was actually a hoax.

CHANGING PUBLIC CONCERNS

- The way the media represents certain groups can also affect and change the public's attitudes. This can also be linked with causing moral panic amongst the public as well.

Negative impact

- Media representation of mod and rockers caused anxiety, public thought the youth were out of control and a potential threat to them.
