bulk of this book is a daily journal blog of my adventures while getting TEFL Teaching English as a Foreign Language certified and my trip to Japan where I taught English to students of all ages I did a lot of things right and I also did a lot of things in the most difficult way imaginable I d never traveled outside the USA before and spoke nearly no Japanese when I started This book has it all exciting adventures traveling to far off cities misadventures on mountaintops and even the occasional rant There s good and bad but it s all real and written when it happened If you ve ever considered going overseas to teach or just are curious about what it s like to live there as an American this book is for you I went to Japan but many of the problems and situations I came across would be the same anywhere I discuss the stresses of getting trained in a university level TEFL course getting over there learning my way around and getting through day to day life in my new world I discuss what s happened what I think it meant and the people I encountered while doing it

The Do's and Don'ts of Teaching English in Japan John A. S. Abecasis-Phillips,1998

The Truth about Teaching English in Japan Douglas G G Fitzgerald,2022-03-10 To be a Japanese teacher of English you need to have 80% arrogance 15% ignorance and 5% skill The classes are so boring that it is difficult for the foreign teacher to stay awake The students are bored to death and after 6 years of learning English in school not one student can have an English conversation The students have very poor listening speaking writing and reading skills Although some students pass English proficiency exams they are still incapable of having an English conversation with a native speaker of English The Japanese teachers do not allow the students to practice their English skills with a native speaker or in class The Japanese teachers cannot acknowledge or admit they made a mistake in class Some Japanese teachers are incapable of expressing their thoughts in Japanese to students so they resort to physical abuse

Team Teaching English in Japanese Schools William Sean Sutherland,King's College London. Department of Education &

Professional Studies, 2010 In Japan the team teaching of English language classes has been a growing phenomenon since the late 1980s Team teaching typically involves two teachers a Japanese teacher of English JTE who has a university degree in English or education and a teaching qualification and an assistant English teacher AET who is usually an untrained recent university graduate from Britain the United States or another country whose citizens are primarily thought to be native English speakers The stated goal of team teaching is to improve Japanese students English abilities by having a native English speaking AET in the class as a model of the target language AETs are often popular with students their parents and administrators primarily because they are seen to provide motivation for language learning JTEs may appreciate AETs especially as co workers to share the workload with something any teacher would certainly appreciate Less research has been done into asking JTEs how they feel about team teaching as it relates to their identities as teachers and as English speakers For this thesis I used qualitative research interviews and classroom observation to investigate what it means to be a Japanese teacher of English who working with an AET This data was related to the relevant literature Several key findings were uncovered JTEs receive no training on team teaching leaving them feeling unable to manage their AET partners JTEs feel that AETs speak real English leaving JTEs in the unenviable position of being expected to teach a language that they are not thought to have mastered AETs provide students with little exposure to real English JTEs sometimes disparage AETs teaching skills and distrust AETs motives for working in Japan and JTEs do not feel they themselves have the skills to teach English
