Marbles A Play In Three Acts:

Marbles Iosif Aleksandrovič Brodskij, 1988 Marbles is essentially a Platonic dialogue executed in the guise of a double anachronism the action takes place two centuries after our era in ancient Rome In the tradition of classicist theater Marbles observes the three unities of time place and action The play is set in a prison where high up in their steel tower the two characters Publius and Tullius consider freedom the nature of reality and illusion and the permanence of literature versus the transience of politics Their discussions often take sardonic turns as the two confined in one cell taunt tease and squabble with each other First unnumbered page Marbles Joseph Brodsky, 1989 A Platonic dialogue in the form of a double anachronism the action takes place two centuries after our era Joseph Brodsky's only play Marbles is set in a prison cell that alone provides for the three unities of classic drama those of time place and action A nightmare rather than a utopia this play proceeds according to the immanent logic of mental aggravation as its two characters the inmates Publius and Tullius examine the tautology of their psychological historical and purely physical confines The fusion of its dour somewhat terrifying vision with the macabre hilarity of its verbal texture allows Marbles to take its audience beyond the farthest reaches of the theatre of the absurd into territory more suitable for modernist imagination than for human experience
