

Henry Reed, "Naming of Parts"

As pointed out in "For Analysis" #2, there are two speakers in the poem. An analysis of the first stanza indicates that the two speakers change at the end of the sentence in line 4. The line beginning with "Japonica" has a new topic, a new vocabulary and a new sentence structure, all signaling a different speaker.

Who are the two, where are we, what's goin' on?

The different speakers and the subject matter suggest a "learning situation," in this case, a teacher and a student—more specifically a Drill Instructor and a trainee, or boot, at a military training situation. The subject? Ostensibly the parts of a firearm.

In the first four stanzas, the teacher or Drill Instructor presents his material in a vocabulary and sentence structure appropriately accessible for the lower IQ that would be present in the group.

While the trainee or boot is clearly not totally engrossed with the lesson, he is not totally ignoring it either, as is evidenced by the last line of each stanza in which he at least partially repeats words of the DI, usually with a ironic or strange twist. For example, in the second stanza, the boot comments ironically on the DI's abilities: "The banches/Hold in the garden their silent eloquent gestures,/Which in our case we have not got" (11-12).

And so the pattern continues: the DI tries to instruct and the distracted boot pays just enough attention to repeat some of his words.

Suddenly, in the fourth stanza, things begin to change. Imagine if you will the physical gestures of the DI as he demonstrates the bolt sliding "rapidly backwards and forwards" (23) in the breech. The mention of the (birds and) bees and the capitalization of "Spring" suggest a new subject.

And in the last stanza the boot starts to put it all together. Repeating some previous phrases and adding some new ones, legitimate arms terminology ("cocking piece" and "point of balance"), the boot realizes that all the DI's words could be taken sexually. That he realizes the connection is clear when after "point of balance" (the anatomical "point" of intercourse), he sardonically adds "which in our case we have not got" (28), reminding us that basic training keeps the boot sexually isolated for weeks.

Once we see the sexuality of the last stanza, we should—like the trainee—begin to see it in the other stanzas. The first now almost seems like a Sex Education course.

So what's the point, that if you're looking for sexual language or metaphors you can find them anywhere? While that's true, that's not really the point. Few readers catch the sexual innuendo on a first read and some of you are still not buying it. But after trying to convince you that this poem is sexual, I need to convince you that it's not about sex.
