

a later intrusive phase of the same activity, which is one of the greatest eruptive events of the world's history. The kimberlite intrusions, like those in the rest of South Africa, are probably Cretaceous.

The natural soils of the country are mostly good, but much overcropped and overstocked, and unfortunately Basutoland has become a sort of type-area for soil erosion and formation of dongas. Trees are very scarce and extensive tree-planting would help much to mitigate this trouble which has led, in certain places, to the drying up of springs.

THE PERMO-TRIASSIC FORMATIONS, A WORLD-REVIEW. By R. L. SHERLOCK, D.Sc., A.R.C.S., F.G.S. Hutchinson's Scientific and Technical Publications, London. No date (1947 or 1948), 31s. 6d.

In this important world-wide review, Dr. Sherlock returns to the problem of the classification of the Permo-Trias and the status of the Permian System. The problem is one that is bound to arise whenever major stratigraphical boundaries are defined in places where incomplete sequences exist, and where of necessity the succession of rocks fails to record some part of geological time. The Permian and Trias, based as they were upon continental developments in a region that had been undergoing major earth-movements at the time, present the problem in a particularly aggravated form.

Dr. Sherlock's main contentions are that the rocks usually assigned to the Permian can always be better treated either as Carboniferous or as Trias, and that there is no justification for perpetuating the Permian as a "System". Much of the book is devoted to a detailed conspectus of the Permo-Trias and "Permo-Carboniferous" in both marine and continental developments. With this in view he discusses the evidence that the local stratigraphy affords wherever the appropriate formations are known all over the world. These chapters on stratigraphy and classification occupy the major part of the book and supply the evidence which is regarded as necessary to prove his contention. There is, however, little discussion of the general principles involved or guide posts to point to the conclusions which the evidence is meant to substantiate. Certainly great concentration is needed to follow the thread of the main arguments through the baffling maze of detail drawn from the world-literature which he abstracts. The assembly of all this scattered information must have been a colossal undertaking, and students of this problem are in debt to Dr. Sherlock for bringing between two covers the vast and scattered literature related to it. His list of authors and titles alone fills 18 pages!

The main discussion is preceded by valuable chapters on "the origin of Red Beds", "the geography of the Permo-Trias", "Palaeontology", and "Economic Products". Dr. Sherlock is a convert to the Wegener Hypothesis of continental drift, especially as modified by du Toit, and he stresses the many features of late-Carboniferous, Permian, and Triassic stratigraphy that accord with Wegener's ideas of the distribution of the continents at that period in Earth history.

ROCKS AND ROCK MINERALS. By L. V. PIRSSON. Third edition, revised by Adolph Knopf, 1947. vii + 349 pages, 108 illustrations. John Wiley and Sons, New York; Chapman and Hall, London. 24s.

The third edition of this work by the late L. V. Pirsson appears after a lapse of twenty-two years and has been revised by Adolph Knopf. Not only has the original text been simplified, condensed, and brought up to date, but portions, such as the chapters on sedimentary rocks, have been rewritten. For those unfamiliar with this book, it should be emphasized that it is concerned only with the megascopic features of rock-forming minerals and rocks and does not deal with their microscopic characters.
