

The Right to Health: Institutional Effects of Constitutional Provisions on Health Outcomes

Matthew M. Kavanagh^{1,2}

Abstract The “right to health” is increasingly enshrined in national constitutions around the world—present today in a slight majority of written constitutions. Whether this trend is good, bad, or meaningless is considerably debated. Contrary to skeptics’ worries, this study finds empirical evidence of a positive role of the right to health in the production of population health. Estimating the most widely promulgated theories of the economic and social determinants of health, and the role of electoral democracy, provides a foundation from which to evaluate the effect of the right to health. This study assembles and analyzes data for 144 countries between 1970 and 2010 and finds that, controlling for these factors, a constitutional right to health contributes significantly to wellbeing. Assembled quantitative and case-study evidence both support the idea that institutional environments shaped by a right to health encourage more and better delivery of health services, which in part account for positive impact on health outcomes. These results suggest that focusing research on political institutions primarily on democratic participation rights ignores important impacts of “entitlement” rights on norms and actors in health policy-making. Overall, the right to health is both an important contextual factor for health research and meaningful institutional innovation.

The Right to Health in the Americas Hernán Luis Fuenzalida-Puelma, Susan Scholle Connor, 1989 F 1 The Right to Life Right to Health, a Comparative Law Perspective, 2022 This study forms part of a larger comparative law project which seeks to present the right to health in a broad range of legal systems around the world After analysing the legislation in force and the most relevant case law the content limits and possible evolution of this right are examined The subject of this study is the United States federal legal system The United States does not recognize a right to health Governments are responsible for providing a healthy environment for individuals who are in their custody such as prisoners but there is no overall recognized right The United States is a party to certain international conventions such as the constitution of the World Health Organization and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination however these instruments play no real role in determining U S domestic health policy Instead domestic policy is grounded upon the federal system which assigns certain duties to the central government and the state governments In addition individuals have strong rights under the U S Constitution which governments must respect Courts must balance these rights against the needs of the public
