Concurrent radiochemotherapy in advanced hypopharyngeal cancer

Valentina Krstevska¹, Igor Stojkovski^{*†1} and Dusko Lukarski^{†2}

Abstract

Background: Concurrent platinum-based radiochemotherapy has been recommended as a standard of care in patients with locally advanced squamous cell head and neck carcinomas. Unfortunately, there is a lack of level-one evidence on best treatment approach for advanced hypopharyngeal cancer. This report aims to summarize the results of our study on concurrent radiochemotherapy in patients with advanced hypopharyngeal cancer.

Methods: A retrospective analysis of 41 patients with stage III-IV hypopharyngeal cancer was performed. All patients were treated with three dimensional conformal radiotherapy and received 70 Gy in 35 fractions (2 Gy per fraction, 5 fractions per week). In dependence of the period when radiotherapy was realized, two different treatment techniques were used. Concurrent chemotherapy consisted of cisplatin 30 mg/m² given on a weekly basis.

Results: The median age was 52 years (range 29-70). Stage IV disease was recognized in 73.2% of the patients. Complete response rates at the primary site and at the metastatic neck lymph nodes were 68.3% and 36.6%, respectively. A complete composite response was present in 27 patients (65.9%). Median follow-up was 13 months (range 7-36). Distant metastases as initial failure occurred in 7 patients (46.7%). The 2-year local relapse-free survival and regional relapse-free survival rates were 55.2% and 75.8%, respectively. The 2-year locoregional relapse-free survival rate was 51.3%. The 2-year disease-free survival and overall survival rates were 29.3% and 32.8%, respectively. Confluent mucositis was developed in 46.3% of patients. Leucopenia grade 1 was the most frequent hematological toxicity. The median weight loss at the end of treatment was 12% (range 5-21). The worst grade of late toxicity was most commonly pronounced in the skin and in the subcutaneous tissue.

Conclusions: Based on unsatisfactory results in our study we suggest that the use of sequential radiochemotherapy or chemotherapy given concomitantly with altered fractionation radiotherapy with the implementation of intensity-modulated radiotherapy as radiotherapy technique could represent treatment approaches able to improve outcome in patients with advanced hypopharyngeal cancer.

Background

Hypopharyngeal cancer is a rare disease representing about 0.5% of all human malignancies with an incidence of less than 1 per 100 000 population and constituting only 3-5% of all head and neck cancers [1,3]. Hypopharyngeal cancers are often at an advanced stage at diagnosis and are associated with a poor prognosis [4,6]. The reasons for the unfavourable prognosis of hypopharyngeal cancers are the strong tendency for extensive submucosal spread, the early occurrence of regional lymphatic involvement, and the relatively high rate of distant spread [7,8].

In the 1970s and 1980s, surgery, followed by postoperative radiotherapy was the standard form of therapy for advanced stage disease [9,10]. This radical approach of treatment, lead to the loss of natural speech function and impairment of swallowing ability with a consequent negative impact on the quality of life, and low cure rates, reported 5-year survival between 20.0% and 50.0% [1,2,7,11,12].

The necessity for improvement of survival rates and preserving organ function resulted in introduction of chemotherapy as a third treatment modality for patients with advanced hypopharyngeal cancer. The combined modality treatment was subject of analysis in two ran-
