Poets & Writers ,2000 The Way to the West and the Lives of Three Early Americans: Boone, Crockett, Carson Emerson Hough,2020-09-28 I ask you to look at this splendid tool the American ax not more an implement of labor than an instrument of civilization If you can not use it you are not American If you do not understand it you can not understand America This tool is so simple and so perfect that it has scarcely seen change in the course of a hundred years It lacks decoration as do the tools and the weapons of all strong peoples It has no fantastic lines no deviations from simplicity of outline no ornamentations no irregularities It is simple severe perfect Its beauty is the beauty of utility In the shaft of the ax there is a curve This curve is there for a reason a reason of usefulness The simple swelling head is made thus not for motives of beauty but for the purpose of effectiveness The shaft an even yard in length polished curved of a formation that shall give the greatest strength to a downright blow in combination with the greatest security to the hand grasp has been made thus for a century of American life This shaft is made of hickory the sternest of American woods the one most capable of withstanding the hardest use It has always been made thus and of this material The metal head or blade of the American ax is to day as it has always been The makers of axes will tell you that they scarcely know of any other model The face of the blade is of the most highly tempered steel for a third or half of its extent The blade or bitt is about eight inches in length the cutting edge four and seven eighths to five inches in width The curve of this edge could not by the highest science be made more perfect for the purpose of biting deepest at the least outlay of human strength The poll or back of the ax is about four inches in width square or roughly rounded into such form that it is capable of delivering a pounding crushing or directing blow The weight of the ax head is about four pounds that is to say from three and one half to five pounds With the ax one can do many things With it the early American blazed his way through the trackless forests With it he felled the wood whereby was fed the home fire or the blaze by which he kept his distant and solitary bivouac With it he built his home framing a fortress capable of withstanding all the weaponry of his time With it he not only made the walls but fabricated the floors and roof for his little castle He built chairs tables beds therewith By its means he hewed out his homestead from the heart of the primeval forest and fenced it round about Without it he had been lost     The Lewis and Clark Expedition Coloring Book Peter F.
