Lawrence H. F. & John C. "Should United States Immigration Policy Be Changed?", AEI Press, 1980.

Lawrence & John thoroughly go through the immigration policy of US in their article. Immigration to the United States of America is the movement of non-residents to the United States (Robert, 2006). Authors comment that the immigration of people to the land has been the major reason of population growth and cultural change in United States even though foreign born population always constitutes less than 15 percent of the total US population, since its 1675 (the beginning of the immigration period). According to the authors, immigration has always been a problem and cause of debate throughout the American history. The social, economic, political and economic aspects of immigration has initiated numerous controversies, problems and debates about race, ethnicity, religion, economic benefits, settlement patterns, housing variations, job growth, impact on upward social mobility, nationalities, political loyalties, levels of criminality, moral values, work habits and several other issues. Lawrence and John (1980) say that immigration is a topic that the whole America is interested in. Even though traditionally, economic arguments and other social and political issues dominated the United States immigration debate, the recent arguments, demands and conflicts are highly polarized by various factors like the nationalist demands for the militarization of the US borders and other demands. Numerous arguments have crept into the political and social arena that compels United States to review its immigration policy.

In order to analyze what Krikorian suggests in his article, it is necessary to study the advantages and disadvantages of immigration in United States. Immigration to the United States of America is the movement of non-residents to the United States. This immigration of people to the land has been the major reason of population growth and cultural change in United States even though foreign born population always constitutes less than 15 percent of the total US population, since its 1675 (the beginning of the immigration period). However, Krikorian's article says that immigration has always been a problem and cause of debate throughout the American history.
