

Developing an integrated science worksheet by combining three different KD requires a certain amount of knowledge about the components and pedagogical skills to package them in a lesson. In-service and pre-service teachers have difficulty making integrated learning in their classes [28]. This difficulty is caused by the lack of training [29]–[31]. Another point is that when teachers develop an integrated learning curriculum without collaborating, there will be many terms and knowledge that ultimately make them avoid developing an integrated curriculum [32].

Feedback from expert validators in the form of limiting the type of project is the right thing. Based on the research between traditional learning and PjBL [33], [34], it was found that PjBL often produced low scores in student final exams. The same thing happened when several researchers [35], [36] compared the open inquiry learning model and guided inquiry. From their research, it was uncovered that students who were not used to inquiry learning would find it difficult to learn with open inquiry; these difficulties caused a decrease in student success in learning. In this study, the development of worksheets was aimed at seventh-grade students who were beginners in working on PjBL-based worksheets.

3.2. Collaboration teaching in the development phase

The worksheet design obtained from CT activities in the exploration phase is called the construction design. This design was tried limitedly three times, each of which was for 15 students in the developing phase. The findings after each DO were used as input for revising the worksheet. The worksheet design would be revised for each trial process based on the SEE feedback results. It is referred to as the construction design. The revision can be seen in Table 2.

Table 2. Findings and revisions of LKPD trial results at each step of PjBL learning

No.	Findings	Revisions
1	The essential questions placed at the beginning of the worksheet are shown in Figure 4. In the first trial, students were too fixated on the essential questions so they forgot that essential questions should not be answered and discussed.	Essential questions on the worksheet were deleted and used as introductory questions for learning by including them in PowerPoint in the introduction.
2	In the first trial, many students were not ready to learn. It was proven from the worksheets that had not been printed, and the students were still confused about which group to enter.	One day before the lesson, the teacher distributed softcopy worksheets in the WhatsApp group and asked each student to print the worksheet and reminded the notes about which group the students should be in so that when rooming was on the breakdown, they had already known which group they should be in.
3	The worksheet's learning activities took a lot of time, and it was difficult for students to start the next activity.	Activities were divided into two: activities in the class and project activities outside the classroom. Therefore, the introductory discourse in Activity 2 was eliminated, and the questions were taken by simplifying the form of questions and adding conclusions, as in Figure 6.
4	In activity 1, students had difficulty attaching pictures of organisms to create and analyze a food chain. This difficulty was caused by unclear pictures and students not knowing of the process of eating and being eaten; for example, a snake is eaten by a king cobra.	a. The organism image was provided directly in the worksheet. Students simply made food chain arrows, which pointed from one organism to another. b. Teachers looked for images that were more suitable and understood by the students, such as shrimp. c. Below the picture of the organism in question, the name in the Indonesian language is given.
5	Students encountered a little difficulty following the project work instructions. It was because students were still in the first level of junior high school, with various elementary school backgrounds, so neither group could produce plastic ore from their PjBL project during the first trial.	The revision in this section can be seen in Figure 7. Revisions to project activities and a video link for making iron ore can be seen in Figure 8.

Based on Table 2 in section 3, we gathered a salient observation: the learning activities inscribed within the predesignated worksheet were unduly time-consuming, presenting formidable obstacles for the students in propelling to the subsequent exercise. Addressing these inefficiencies, the once-included introductory speech in Activity 2 was strategically excised, an alteration compelled not by convenience but by optimum utilization of available time. Simultaneously, question formats within the exercise received significant simplification, with the objective remaining the homogenization of comprehension, engagement, and efficiency while precluding the sacrifice of any of the aforementioned parameters at the altar of rigid temporal constraints. Furthermore, to commendably maintain the academic rigor and integrity of the learning activity, conclusions were incorporated within the revised format. These comprehensive amendments are best
