Hirt, 2012-10-18 The Pacific Northwest holds an abundance of resources for energy production from hydroelectric power to coal nuclear power wind turbines and even solar panels But hydropower is king Dams on the Columbia Snake Fraser Kootenay and dozens of other rivers provided the foundation for an expanding regionally integrated power system in the U S Northwest and British Columbia A broad historical synthesis chronicling the region s first century of electrification Paul Hirt s new study reveals how the region s citizens struggled to build a power system that was technologically efficient financially profitable and socially and environmentally responsible Hirt shows that every energy source comes with its share of costs and benefits Because Northwest energy development meant river development the electric power industry collided with the salmon fishing industry and the treaty rights of Northwest indigenous peoples from the 1890s to the present Because U S federal agencies like the Army Corps of Engineers and the U S Bureau of Reclamation built many of the large dams in the region a significant portion of the power supply is publicly owned initiating contentious debates over how that power should best serve the citizens of the region Hirt dissects these ongoing battles evaluating the successes and failures of regional efforts to craft an efficient yet socially just power system Focusing on the dynamics of problem solving governance and the tense relationship between profit seeking and the public interest Hirt's narrative takes in a wide range of players not only on the consumer side where electricity transformed mills mines households commercial districts urban transit factories and farms but also power companies operating at the local and regional level and investment companies that financed and in some cases parasitized the operators His study also straddles the international border It is the first book to compare energy development in the U S Northwest and British Columbia Both engaging and balanced in its treatment of all the actors on this expansive stage The Wired Northwest helps us better understand the challenges of the twenty first century as we try to learn from past mistakes and re design an energy grid for a more sustainable future

Postcolonialism, Indigeneity and Struggles for Food Sovereignty Marisa Wilson, 2016-10-04 This book explores connections between activist debates about food sovereignty and academic debates about alternative food networks The ethnographic case studies demonstrate how divergent histories and geographies of people in place open up or close off possibilities for alternative sovereign food spaces illustrating the globally uneven and varied development of industrial capitalist food networks and of everyday forms of subversion and accommodation How for example do relations between alternative food networks and mainstream industrial capitalist food networks differ in places with contrasting histories of land appropriation trade governance and consumer identities to those in Europe and non indigenous spaces of New Zealand or the United States How do indigenous populations negotiate between maintaining a sense of moral connectedness to their agri and acqua cultural landscapes and subverting or indeed appropriating industrial capitalist approaches to food By delving into the histories geographies and everyday worlds of post colonial peoples the book shows how colonial power relations of the past and present create more opportunities for some alternative producer consumer and state market civil society relations than others
