(Fla.). Department of Public Utilities, A. P. Black, C. G. Thompson, 1971 Laboratory investigations into the use of magnesium carbonate instead of alum for coagulation have demonstrated that the magnesium carbonate system produces a treated water with superior characteristics compared to water treated with alum Both turbidity and organic color removals were comparable for both processes and the flocs formed by the magnesium carbonate process were larger and heavier than alum flocs with better settling characteristics The process involves the use of the magnesium carbonate as a coagulant and lime is added to precipitate gelatinous $Mg(OH)_2$ The sludge composed of a slurry of $Mg(OH)_2$, $CaCO_3$ and clay is carbonated and the $Mg(OH)_2$ selectively and completely dissolved Recycle after filtering allows re use of both the magnesium carbonate and the sludge water $CaCO_3$ can also be recovered easily in large plants or landfilled at small ones Chemical treatment costs for most waters can be substantially reduced using this system while the quality of treated water will be superior to the quality of alum treated water

Corrosion Protection of Magnesium and Magnesium Alloys E. L. White, Frederick W. Fink, 1965 This memorandum deals with the corrosion protection of magnesium and magnesium alloys The corrosion resistance of these alloys in many natural environments while not as good as that of copper nickel stainless steel and aluminum is in the same range as that of the iron and plain carbon steels Some type of additional corrosion protection is often necessary and as with steel the protective measures usually involve some type of coating system and or surface treatments Also magnesium can suffer accelerated attack when coupled in the presence of a conductive electrolyte to most metals below it in the galvanic series This galvanic effect complicates the problem of corrosion protection A number of coating systems have been proposed and used satisfactorily Depending upon the application these coating systems include the use of conversion coatings organic coatings metallic coatings and others In addition special designs can be employed to improve the over all corrosion resistance of the systems This memorandum describes many of the coating systems and design methods which are used to reduce corrosive attack on both galvanically coupled and uncoupled magnesium assemblies Author
