Birth Control: Should it be offered freely in schools? Should it need a parent's approval?

Give My Child Aspirin, Not Birth Control!

Portland, Maine have begun to discuss the option of allowing middle school students, as young as 11 years old to begin to receive contraception in the form of birth control without a parent's approval at a schools health center. King Middle School will be the first school to begin this program as the first in the state and one of the few in the nation to offer at this age. Studies have found that a child's sexual interest being roughly around ages 11-12 and parents should not be surprised if they being have sexual intercourse at this time. Upon starting school a child would need approval for items such as medical check ups, screenings, counseling and even aspirin but if the bill passes for birth control, that state will not allow the child to need approval from a parent/guardian for birth control. Many argue that this age is too young to be making these decisions and an approval is a must. Many are trying to get this recalled for King Middle School and it is unclear whether this has taken place.

Foster, Kate. "Doctors Demand the Morning-After Pill for Schoolgirls : BMA Backs Birth Control without Parental Consent: SC1 Edition]." Daily Mail, Dec 17, 2002, pp. 17. ProQuest,

Doctors in Scotland are arguing that children in schools should be offered the morning after pill or Plan-B as it is often referred to as without parental approval. The doctors think sex education should be begin around children aged two to three with the talk of common questions and continue through primary (grades 1-8) and secondary (grades 9-12) schooling. They believe that with these options there will be decrease in teen pregnancies and sexually transmitted diseases within the next five years. The doctors believe there is a time to get consent for these options and a time when it is between the nurse and the child. Nurses should have more range to help children with these situations without having to get parent consent. Parents are arguing that a child, especially in primary school are not ready to make these dramatic life-changing decisions. The UK has a wide spread problem with teen pregnancies and they believe this will help solve the epidemic.
