Abstract

The study was a cross-sectional descriptive survey which sought to find out the extent to which sex role and sex-bias stereotyping existed in vocational and technical schools in Cape Coast. A questionnaire was administered to 40 parents, 40 teachers and 120 students. It was hypothesized that parents could be a factor in the extent to which such stereotyping existed in the institutions, therefore 40 parents were also included in the study. All the subjects were selected at random from 5 vocational and technical schools. The study confirmed that sex role and sex-bias stereotyping still existed in the institutions and that within the major stakeholders, parents were the most stereotyped when it comes to education and training. Also it was found that choice of traditional technical programmes persisted in the institutions and that there was the need to encourage and ensure that more females offer male-oriented programmes whiles more males also offer female-oriented programmes. It was recommended that a quota system be used to reserved enrollment places for females who offer male oriented programmes and vice versa.
